"I never thought we'd get all these people, including some third cousins. I'm so excited that I can hardly stand it! Many members of both families have never met," Ware said. "But now children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren of those who lived in Hingham and Cohasset about a hundred years ago will come and see where not so very long ago, all those people grew up together as one large extended family."

To compile a list of descendants of both families, Ware worked from a 1949 Collier family genealogy. She compiled one for the Lincoln family from information obtained from Hingham Public Library.

Ware is looking forward to meeting relatives who are coming from other areas.

"We have some artists and writers in the family," she noted, "and some college teachers, too."

A number of events are scheduled for family members during the reunion weekend.

"There will be a chance to see the houses their descendants lived in, churches they went to, the village green they lived around, the beach where they went swimming and the harbor they sailed out of — some never to return — not so very much changed over all the years," Ware said.

Cohasset was part of Hingham until 1717 when its inhabitants petitioned the General Court to become a separate precinct with its own church and school.

On Friday morning, Aug. 18, there will be a trolley-bus tour of historic spots in Hingham and Cohasset, including Old Ship Church, Old Ordinary, a view of old family houses and Hingham Cemetery.

A visit to the Maritime Museum, First Parish and St. Stephen's churches and a scenic drive down Jerusalem Road are planned in Cohasset. In the evening, there will be a lobster bake at the Ware home.

A family service —open to the community —will be held at Old Ship Church Saturday afternoon at 5 p.m., followed by a farewell dinner at the home of the Wares' daughter, Meg Lind, and her husband Matt, at their Lincoln Street home. Meg is a 12th descendant of both Thomas Collier and Samuel Lincoln.

"It will be interesting to meet long-lost relatives," Meg Lind said.

All welcome to family service

As part of a reunion for descendants of Thomas Collier and Samuel Lincoln to be held in Hingham, there will be a special family service at Old Ship Church Saturday, Aug. 19, at 5 p.m. All members of the community are cordially invited to attend.

The church was built by early settlers from the Lincoln family, which served as a meetinghouse for the town during the early 1600s when Hingham was first settled.

The non-denominational service of remembrance and reflection, including appropriate hymns, will be conducted by the Rev. John Gallop of Cohasset.

Old Ship, built in 1681, is the oldest church in the country that has been in continuous use as a church.

Area women ride for a diabetes cure

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

Laura Buchanan and Erin Delaney know all about rolling over hill, over dale. In mid-July, the two friends traversed most of New England - including the stern and rockbound coast of Maine and the Green and White Mountain majesties of New Hampshire. Their 565-mile ride began and ended at the Woburn Mall.

What makes two seemingly normal young women spend seven days on a bicycle? They did it for a good reason: to help fund diabetes research.

"You had to raise $1,200 in pledges to enter," said Delaney. "There were only 100 riders but we raised a total of $128,000.

Fundraising is actually harder than pedaling a bicycle.

Laura Buchanan and Erin Delaney

The two women raised approximately $1,300 apiece. Both agree on one thing.

"Fundraising is actually harder than pedaling a bicycle," they said.

There really wasn't any personal involvement behind choosing the Diabetes Foundation ride, although since their involvement they are discovering they know far more people with diabetes than they would have guessed.

"It's the first one I heard about," explains Buchanan. She was looking for a long ride after getting involved in the three-day AIDS ride from Boston to New York City. "You just get hooked," she explains. "Now it's my baby."

While Buchanan has been riding for sometime, Delaney is a relative newcomer.

"I've only been riding a couple of years," she said.

Training for mountain riding is something of a challenge on the South Shore.

"We tried to go up every hill we could find," Delaney said. The best they could find were in Hull and North Marshfield.

Buchanan and Delaney had plenty of adventures while training. Both agree they saw more wildlife while training than they did riding through the wilderness places. Delaney also got a bit of a boost in the speed-racing department when a bee somehow found its way inside her shirt.

"I've never seen Erin ride that fast," Buchanan said. While it's easy for them to joke about it now, at the time it was no laughing matter. Before Delaney could get off her bike and out of her shirt, the bee had stung her twice.

Squeezing out training time was tough. Both have family commitments and full time jobs.

"We rode both Saturday and Sunday," Buchanan said. "We tried to cover at least 120-130 miles in the two days. And during the week we rode our bikes to work."

Riding their bikes to work is no stroll in the park. Buchanan lives in Scituate; Delaney lives in Marshfield and both work in Cohasset village.

Buchanan and Delaney say their co-workers at ABB Optical were very supportive, not even squawking when it seemed one of the women's bathrooms had become their personal dressing room. They also rave about the support they got from their families.

"My husband, Joe, was terrific," said Delaney.

Buchanan said her mom, Jean, deserves mountains of credit "for putting up with me and worrying about me." Buchanan also had high praise for her hometown firefighters.

"The Scituate Fire Department really helped out," she said. "They were very generous."

Getting up and over the mountains proved to be the biggest challenge of the race.

Delaney still can't believe they made it up 26,000 vertical feet of mountain. And then there was that six-mile long climb through Crawford's Notch in New Hampshire. Asked how her legs felt at the end, Delaney quickly replies. "Big. Solid."

That's even more of an effort when you know that Buchanan's bike lacked the ring commonly referred to as "the Granny Gear."

"That's the easiest gear," she explains. "Had I known about it, I would have had one put on. Now I know that I can do it without one."

Delaney just shakes her head. According to her, the granny gear is

Seadogs play for national title this week

Cohasset's Byrne helps lead the way for elite regional team

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Brendan Byrne, the only Cohasset member of the elite 16 and under South Shore Baseball Red Seadogs, will be heading to Atlanta, Georgia with his teammates this week to compete for the National AAU title.

Cohasset baseball enthusiasts may remember Byrne playing at Barnes Little League Field, where he led the Dodgers to the 1996 championships.

Byrne— who is also a standout hockey player, football player and boxer—is the Seadogs' starting second baseman and leadoff hitter.

"I try to get things goings, and set the pace of the game," said Byrne of his position atop the lineup.

Byrne has filled the role of leadoff man extremely well, with his high batting average (over .350) and ability to steal bases.

"He's an excellent base runner," said Seadogs coach Rick Delvecchio, who is also one the top recruiters in the area. "He has a terrific primary and secondary lead."

In order to be accepted among this distinguished group of youth ballplayers, each participant had to go through a two-part tryout. With more than 60 athletes vying for a spot on the team's 15-player roster, over three-fourths went home disappointed.

"There were a lot of kids and a lot of competition," said Byrne, who was very modest about making the team. "It was hard to get noticed by the coaches."

The coaches to which Byrne referred are Rick and Lenny Delvecchio, Kerry Cole and Steve Cushing.

A student at Milton Academy, Byrne has played AAU baseball since he was 12.

"Brendan is an intelligent, smart baseball player," said coach Delvecchio. "He's a real team leader."

The Seadogs have compiled a 24-6 record, which includes a few state and regional tournaments. Last month, the team competed in the Junior Olympics national tournament in Kissimmee, Florida.

"This is an All-Star team of All-Star teams," observed Delvecchio, who has traveled to Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Maine in search of talent for the Seadogs.

After winning three games in Kissimmee, the Seadogs were

Field of dreams

New softball league helps seniors recapture youth

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

So where's the corn field?

Watching the way these guys light up on the ball field, one wishes mightily that there was a mystical cornfield they could walk into and emerge with their youth and best games restored.

"I think that the people we have here now are devoted, and we're confident that the numbers will keep going up now that the word is getting out. I think what's going to keep bringing these guys back is their competitiveness. We have good players here, and they love to compete. We're definitely looking for more players like that."

League Director Jim Hyde, Scituate

Jim Hyde knew starting out with his push to form a 50-plus senior softball league that stoking the passions of his peers wouldn't be a problem. After all, in the simpler days of their youth, baseball was so much more than a game; it was ingrained in the culture, just as it was so skillfully depicted in classic film alluded to in the headline above. But while the spirit would certainly be willing in most cases, the question remained about how able the flesh would be.

"Ugh, I'm hurting muscles that I'd forgotten I had," announced Jim Dimento, 67, following his first week of play in the South Shore Seniors Softball League. However, he did so with a huge smile plastered on his face.

Dimento, of Humarock, figures that this past Sunday marked the first time he'd slipped a baseball mitt on his hand in 35 years.

Most of the 30 or so members of this fledgling program have a similar tale to tell. Some had played in softball leagues into their 40s and a few had even remained somewhat active in the sport. Whatever their respective recent background, however, the group seems to speak with a single voice on the subject of the league that was Hyde's brainchild.

"Every Sunday morning, I feel like a kid in a candy store," confessed Marshfield's Pat Thompson, 61. "And I don't think you'll find anyone out here who won't say the same."

The South Shore Seniors Softball League was the vision of Scituate's

Swimmers put Marshfield under

Swim team heads into regional championships on high note

By Eileen McBride

The sun was shinning again at Cohasset Swim Center on Friday as the home team re-established their winning reputation with a 34-point victory over a highly competitive Marshfield squad. In their final outing before the regional championships, Cohasset wasted no time in recovering from last week's disappointing defeat, pulling off a tremendous victory against arch rivals, Mask, and ending the season with a 5-1 record.

From the outset, it was apparent that this was not going to be an easy meet but the 8 and under boys led the team off to a great start with a win in the 100 yards medley relay (1st: Doonan, Porter, Stevenson, Carrier; 2nd: Quaenan, Buckley, Poh, Durkin, T.; 4th: Lynner, Campbell, Murphy, Olsthum). The 8 and under girls and 10 and under boys managed two second place finishes, while the 10 and under girls just missed a second, but took third, fourth and sixth places (girls 8 and under: 2nd: Mahoney, Sullivan, Lehr, Zappolo; 4th: Musto, Teague, Dickinson, Madge; 5th: Fontaine, Kelly, Murphy, Jennings; boys 10 and under 2nd: Hunt, Musto, Shipp, Doonan; 3rd: Muir, Porter, Drybanski; DeGiacomo; 4th: McCarthy, Kelly, Grezan, Wheelwright; girls 10 and under 3rd: Herman, Fortin, Lehr, Mahoney; 4th: Regan, Mankham, Campbell, Teague; 5th: McCarthy, C., Dunn, Anderson, Henry).

The 12 and under boys pulled back with a win in their event (1st: Herman, Dickinson, Berg, Zappolo; 3rd: McCarthy, Roach, Conway, Faber), and the girls followed with a second, third, and fifth place finish (2nd: Musto, Durkin, Garber, Daly, 3rd: Harrington, Shea, Englander, Previte; 5th: Faugere, Sida, Swain, Madge). With the move from the 100 to 200 yard medleys, Cohasset turned in a win in the boys 17 and under event, but just missed first place in the girls' race (boys: 1st: McCarthy, Faber, Ingber, Lehr; 3rd: Previte, Etkind, Tehranian, Roach; girls: 2nd: Larson, Anderson, Garber, Lehr; 4th: Bugley, Faber, Orsini, Foley, C.; 5th: Foley, T., Grimm, Scribner, Mello). Cohasset's first efforts were not enough, however, and, as the medley relays came to an end, Marshfield led by 8 points.

The 50-yard freestyles brought second, third and fourth place finishes from the 10 and under boys and a second, fourth and fifth from the girls taking Mask to a 12-point lead (boys: 2nd: Poh, R.; 3rd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Shipp, A.; girls: 2nd: Meehan, S. 4th: Lehr, S.; 5th: Mahoney, C.).

The 100 yard individual medleys came next and the 12 and under boys helped close the gap with a win in the first of their races (1st: Berg, P.; 3rd: Dickinson, R.; 4th: McCarthy, J.). The 12 and under girls narrowed the margin further with another win (1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Musto, L.; 4th: Daley, M.), and the 14 and under boys pushed Cohasset just ahead of Mask, with first, third and fourth place finishes (1st: McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Tehraman, K.; 4th: Etkind, Z.). Cohasset continued to hold the lead almost to the end of the medleys, but a win from Mask in the girls 17 under race, put the visitors back ahead by 6 points (girls 14 and under: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 3rd: Anderson, C.; 5th: Regan, D.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Faber, S.; 4th: Flynn, C.; 5th: Roach, J.; girls 17 and under: 3rd: Carter, C.; 4th: Bugley, A.).

The freestyle events were next and the youngest team members went to work right away to win all four 25-yard races (boys 8 and under: 1st: Porter, I.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; 5th: Stevenson, G.; girls 8 and under: 1st: Lehr, T.; 5th: Zappolo, C.; 6th: Jennings, M.; boys 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 4th: Poh, R.; 5th: Muir, K.; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Lehr, S.; 3rd: Mahoney, C.; 4th: Regan, M.). The 12 and under boys maintained the momentum with a first and second in the 50-yard freestyle (1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; 5th: Gammon, B.), while the girls managed second, third and fourth places (2nd: Englander, E.; 3rd: Garber, C.; 4th: Daley, M.). Two more wins from the 14 and under boys, and the 17 and under boys, brought the freestyle races to an end and Cohasset back into the lead, now 10 points ahead of Marshfield (boys 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, W.; 2nd: Bilton, B.; 4th: Regan, C.; girls 14 and under: 3rd: Lehr, B.; 4th: Larson, J.; 5th: Garber, R.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Previte, J.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Foley, C.; 3rd: Carter, C.; 5th: Ogrodnik, M.).

Swimmers in the butterfly events started well with an early win from the 8 and under boys (1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Stevenson, G.; 5th: Durkin, T.) and the pace continued with three further wins in the remaining four 25-yard races (girls 8 and under: 2nd: Lehr, T.; 5th: Zappolo, C.; 6th: Fontaine, E.; boys 10 and under: 1st: Doonan, P.; 4th: Muir, K.; 6th: Shipp, A.; girls 10 and under: 1st: Meehan, S.; 2nd: Hernan, E.; 6th: Campbell, A.; boys 12 and under: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 3rd: Conway, C.; 4th: Faber, C.; girls 12 and under: 3rd: Englander, E.; 4th: Garber, C.; 6th: Sida, C.).

In the 50-yard butterfly, the 14 and under boys again brought home a victory and, with second and third finishes in the girls 14 and under, boys 17 and under and girls 17 and under events, Cohasset continued to hold onto the lead (boys 14 and under: 1st: Tehranian, K.; 2nd: McCarthy, W.; 4th: Etkind, Z.; girls 14 and under: 2nd: Garber, R.; 3rd: Orsini, M.; 5th: Foley, T.; boys 17 and under: 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Carter, C.; 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.; 4th: Scribner, J.). The score now stood at Cohasset 185, Marshfield 163.

Performances were mixed in the 25 yard breaststroke events but with second place finishes in two of the four races, Cohasset continued to stay just ahead of Mask (boys 8 and under: 2nd: Porter, I.; 3rd: Campbell, B.; 4th: Buckley, T.; girls 8 and under: 3rd: Kelly, M.; 5th: Teague, K.; 6th: Sullivan, O.; boys 10 and under: 2nd: Musto, C.; 3rd: Drybanski, J.; 5th: Porter, N.; girls 10 and under: 3rd: Meikleham, A.; 4th: Fortin, S.; 6th: Foley, A.). And, in the 50-yard breaststroke, a string of excellent times gave the home team four wins and a series of second and third placements to keep the pressure on the visitors and maintain Cohasset's edge (boys 12 and under: 1st: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Conway, C.; 5th: Roach, K.; girls 12 and under: 2nd: Durkin, L.; 5th: Sida, C.; 6th: Shea, E.; boys 14 and under: 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Etkind, Z.; 4th: Regan, C.; girls 14 and under: 1st: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Faber, A.; 4th: Regan, D.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Faber, S.; 4th: Roach, J.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Grimm, K.; 3rd: Foley, C.).

The backstroke came next, and while the younger boys and girls couldn't quite make a win in the 25-yard events, the 10 and under boys and girls took first and second places in both of their races (boys, 8 and under: 2nd: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; 6th: Yeager, J.; girls 8 and under: 2nd: Sullivan, O.; 4th: Mahoney, M.; 6th: Kelly, M.; boys 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 3rd: Poh, R.; girls 10 and under: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Meehan, S.; 6th: Teague, M.).

In the 50-yard races Cohasset had continued success, with wins in four out of six of their races (boys 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, A.; 3rd: Berg, P.; 4th: Conway, C.; girls 12 and under: 1st: Musto, L.; 5th: Swain, K.; boys 14 and under: 1st: Bilton, B.; 2nd: Tehranian, K.; 4th: Previte, J.; girls 14 and under: 3rd: Larson, J.; 4th: Lehr, B.; 5th: Foley, T.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 3rd: Bugley, A.; 4th: Weston, E.; 6th: Sanchez, A.). Going into the final leg of the meet the score now stood at 277 for the home team and 251 for the visitors. Even now the win could go either way.

The 8 and under boys followed their now established pattern, and set Cohasset off to a great start with a first place in the 100 yard relay (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Carrier, Stevenson, Porter, Doonan; 3rd: Durkin, T., Murphy, Shipp, Yeager; 4th: Durkin, Ja., Durkin, Je., Forrer, MacCormack). The girls just missed the win, but kept the momentum going with second, fourth and sixth place finishes (girls 8 and under: 2nd: Zappolo, Jennings, Mahoney, Lehr; 4th: Dickinson, Donohue, Madge, Regan; 6th: Fortin, Axelson, Kelly, Culhane). The 10 and under boys took another win (boys 10 and under: 1st: Doonan, Drybanski, Poh, Hunt; 4th: Kelly, Porter, Yeager, Wheelwright; 5th: DeGiacomo, Lemaire, MacCarthy, Parker) and, although the girls missed the first, their second place finish kept Cohasset ahead by 26 points (girls 10 and under: 2nd: Mahoney, Lehr, Meehan, Hernan; 5th: Baumgarten, Durkin, Foley, Coggins; 6th: Asnault, Hurd, Kearns, McElhinny).

In the final two 100 yard races, with all still left to play for, both the 14 and under girls and boys sped home to secure two further wins and add an additional 8 points to Cohasset's score (boys 12 and under: 1st: Zappolo, Dickinson, Berg, Hernan; 3rd: Holway, Masotta, Gammon, Roach; girls 12 and under: 1st: Gaber, Englander, Daley, Durkin; 5th: Crowley-Buck, Muir, Plante, Muir; 6th: Coggins, Guinee, McBride, Lemaire).

The meet was rounded off with a win from the 17 and under boys, and a third, fourth and sixth place finish for the girls in their 200-yard relay events (boys 17 and under: 1st: Faber, Ingber, Bilton, Lehr; 3rd: Blackburn, Roach, Previte, Regan; girls 17 and under: 3rd: Anderson, Garber, Carter, Lehr; 4th: Faber, Larson, Regan, Foley, C.; 6th: Harrington, Henderson, McCarthy, Ogrodnik). The final score stood at 329 for Cohasset and 295 for Mask.

It was a thrilling end to a wonderfully successful season for Cohasset Swim Team. The final margin of victory in this last meet was small, but a win against one of the regions toughest teams takes Cohasset to the Regional Championships with confidence.

Many congratulations to the swimmers for their winning performances throughout the season. And congratulations to coaches Allison Hughes and Michael Monaghan for leading their swimmers to a 5-1 season record. We wish them good luck for the Championships at Wheaton College this Saturday, where Cohasset will defend its 1999 title.

invited to play for the Arby's Super Seven World Series in Atlanta, Georgia for the National Title, which start this week.

The team left for Atlanta on Wednesday. Like the other teams in the tourney, the Seadogs are scheduled to play two games each on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Playoffs will be held on Sunday.

The Seadogs have won two straight bronze medals in the this tournament, to ensure a perennial invite to this prestigious tournament. However, they will have their work cut out for them against the six-time defending champions, the East Cobb Astros of Georgia. Over 25 Astros have gone on to play in the major leagues, including Jason Kendall of the Pittsburgh Pirates and Kevin Millwood of the Atlanta Braves.

The other teams who are invited year after year are the Bayside Yankees from New York, a team who produced Johnny Damon of the Kansas City Royals and Alex Rodriguez of the Seattle Mariners, the Chet Lemon Juice of Florida, the Orange County Dawgs of California, the Blue Springs Sluggers of Kansas, and the Maryland Orioles.

Even against "the best youth teams in America," as Delvecchio called them, the Seadogs should perform quite well in this high pressure tournament.

Said Byrne: "If we play to our potential, we will be very competitive, and hopefully win some games."

Area women ride for a diabetes cure

the only way she made it through the mountains.

If the mountains were tough, the coast wasn't much easier.

"On the second day we rode 65 miles in the pouring rain," Delaney said. That stretch of bad weather happened at what should have been one of the most scenic parts of their ride, Nubble Light in Maine. Instead, they were sloshing in their socks and trying to keep the rain out of their eyes.

Delaney said it wasn't necessarily all bad.

"Being wet took our minds off our seat issues," she said. Buchanan chimes in, "You just thought about being wet and being safe."

Their reward for toughing it out each day was a warm bed with sheets and pillows and a hot shower. The riders were put up in college dorms along the route.

Their biggest concern was food. Riding bicycles burns lots of calories and the two say they just couldn't seem to fill up enough.

It didn't take long to fall into a routine.

"It was eat, ride, sleep." Delaney says. "You woke up in the morning, ate, put your helmet on and rode your bike. At night, you took the helmet off, ate and slept.

Both agree they did surprisingly well.

"We based it on how other riders felt," said Buchanan. She adds that some people were surprised to find them still going strong at the end. That's not so surprising since half the riders were only willing to tackle the first two days of the race.

Seven days proved less than daunting. So much less that they actually mentioned the word "cross-country," but agreed that they had too many responsibilities to commit to six weeks to two months behind the handle bars of a bicycle.

"I'll do a seven-day ride again," promised Buchanan.

Asked what they learned from their ride, the two quickly agree. Wear gloves, bring lots of socks, pack the special fabric bicycle clothes and drink plenty of water. The other main lesson: travel light.

"We had an award night the last night of the ride," Delaney says. "One of the awards was for heaviest luggage. They gave that to my friend, Laura."

Buchanan laughs. "They gave me a rock," she said.

The lure of riding is the camaraderie it encourages. They enjoy the long rides and the opportunity to talk while enjoying the fresh air and beautiful sights along the way.

"We're definitely doing it again next year," they agree.

Hyde. The 64-year-old had played the previous nine summers in the Cape Cod Seniors League, which currently has 16 teams, and thought he might be able to make a go of something similar a little closer to home. So this winter he approached Scituate's Senior Center director Joan Wright and coordinator Bill Petriscyn with the idea of doing just that. With the help of this pair, the word went out, and before he knew it Hyde had enough players to start a two-team league, which he did in early May.

The seniors suit up for play every Sunday, at 10 a.m., behind the Gates School on Old Parish Road in Scituate, and will continue to do so this year, as Hyde says, "until the first snow flies."

In all, 53 seniors signed up. Unfortunately, a good number of these fell by the wayside pretty quickly. The 31 who are still playing today, however, appear to be quite committed to the league, and Hyde reports that the number of serious ballplayers is on the rise.

In the last three weeks, the league has seen its ranks grow by a half dozen. Hyde's immediate goal is to get enough players to form a third team, which will make it possible to have "round robin" play.

"I think that the people we have here now are devoted, and we're confident that the numbers will keep going up now that the word is getting out," said Hyde. "I think what's going to keep bringing these guys back is their competitiveness. We have good players here, and they love to compete. We're definitely looking for more players like that."

Bob Clifford, 60, of Hingham, had been playing organized softball up until a few years ago and still hooked up in the occasional pickup game. However, getting involved in a serious league with players his own age has revitalized his interest in a big way.

"Let's face it, we can't move and throw and hit like we once could," conceded Clifford, a teacher at Hull High School who underwent quadruple bypass surgery in 1991. "But we have serious players here and it's a level playing field. These are good competitive games."

To say the least. Even the occasional flaring of tempers is not a rare occurrence. There were a few tense moments this past Sunday in a scrimmage between the South Shore squad and a traveling team from the Cape Cod League, one or two in particular following the enforcement of an official American Softball Association (ASA) rule with which a South Shore player was unfamiliar. However, unlike the many flare ups we are treated to almost nightly on shows such as ESPN's SportsCenter, these little clashes seemed to be quickly laughed off and forgotten.

"I think some of us come out here mostly for the fighting," joked Scituate's Dave Hockman, 57, who made the defensive play of the game on Sunday — a lunging shoestring catch of a liner at shortstop that would've done Nomar Garciaparra proud. "We like getting the fires burning again and sometimes it bubbles over a little. We're still competitive, but we're also old enough to realize pretty quickly that this is just a game and not worth getting all worked up over."

The South Shore Seniors adhere to ASA guidelines for senior league division play. The primary intent behind most of these supplementary rules is clearly to decrease the risk of injury. There are two first bases and home plates, one for the fielders to stand on, the others for the runners, which greatly reduces the potential for collisions. There is also a line half way between third and home, which once passed commits the base runner to go home, thus eliminating rundowns. Also, sliding into bases results automatically in an out and base stealing is forbidden.

Each team puts 11 players in the field at a time, with a "short fielder" (shallow outfielder) and a fourth outfielder being added to the traditional nine position set. Most clubs carry at least 15 ballplayers, with all being rotated in and out of the defensive alignment. However, everyone who shows up hits in the batting order.

At the other end of the age spectrum is Frank Murano, 79, of Weymouth. Amazingly, he is also the team's most active player.

Frank, a former semi-pro baseball player, has been a member of the nation's elite Seniors softball circuit for more than a decade. His current team for players age 75 and up is headquartered in Baltimore, Md. Next month, he will be traveling with this team, which is sponsored by Tremont Hotels, to the Seniors' World Series in Detroit and after that to the World Championship in Winnipeg, Canada.

Frank was one of the many who saw his shot at a Major league baseball career wiped out by a call to duty in World War II. Still, he used to train with the old Red Sox back in he 1930s and '40s. In fact, he was on the field working out with the BoSox the day in 1939 when Ted Williams made his debut. He was also good friends with several major leaguers, including Dom Dimaggio of the Red Sox and Joe Gordon of the Yankees.

"It was a great game back then," said Murano, still a slick fielding shortstop. "We've got some great athletes in the game today, but I think there were better overall players in my era."

On this point, Scituate's Emory Ariel agreed.

"The players in our age were bigger than life to us," said the 65-year-old retiree from the staff at M.I.T.. "Now the only thing that's bigger than life about them is their salaries."

"And their egos," someone else chimed in, drawing laughter and several nods of agreement.

"Look at us," joked Rick Dangora, 57, of Humarock, a professional comedian/impressionist . "No one here is in danger of being suspended or looking to renegotiate their contract. We're playing for the right reasons."

South Main Street reopens

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though cars may once again travel down South Main Street, not all residents are happy.

Ground contamination from gasoline forced work crews to bring in extra equipment in order to finish the sewer line construction project on South Main Street, necessitating the street's closure.

South Main Street was closed from the intersection of Summer Street down to the Paul Pratt Library, from July 17 until August 9. Initial estimates said the road would only be closed for five days, but according to Deanene Tutela, president of Tutela Engineering, which oversees the town's sewer project, the contamination was worse than expected and required more time to clean.

The problem, according to one local resident is that even though work is supposedly finishing up, the site is still considered by the Department of Environmental Protection as contaminated.

Workers for contractor J. D. Amico Inc., originally discovered the contamination on Oct. 28, while digging a trench. Work in the area stopped – though it continued elsewhere in town – until July. State clean-up laws require any contaminated groundwater work crews encounter to be filtered and treated. However, the contaminated soil did not have to be treated and could be used to refill the trench.

"When they dug the middle of the street up, you could smell stale gasoline in my house," said the neighbor, who asked that his name not be used.

His concern is the future impact the contaminated soil will have on surrounding land. He was particularly worried about his own property and his basement's stone floor.

"What is this stuff creeps under my house, and I'm not allowed to live here any more?" he asked. "Who's responsible."

The owner of the former gas station near the site, Frank Scarpino, has filed papers with the DEP saying he is financially unable to pay for the clean up, said Pat Donahue, section chief of audits with the DEP.

The leftover residue from the carbon filtering system used to treat the contaminated groundwater has not yet fully set due to the warm weather, according to Tutela. But because of Town Manager Mark Haddad's insistence that the street be reopened, steel plates will cover the work site for the immediate future.

Haddad said though the site is still contaminated, the town is not violating any laws, and public health is not at risk. "Everything there was done with the DEP's approval," he said. "We worked with the state and federal government and did everything by the book. Obviously we will continue to monitor the town's water supply and aquifers leading to the water supply."

Cohasset Board of Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the contamination poses no threat to the town's water supply at Lily Pond. He also said the DEP has money available to clean up contaminated sites, but doubts the South Main Street site would receive a high enough classification to qualify for a federally sponsored clean-up.

Social host bill signed into law

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

A long struggle by proponents of the Social Host Responsibility bill ended late last week, when Gov. Paul Cellucci signed the measure making it illegal for an adult to "knowingly and intentionally" supply alcohol to a minor.

"This takes away any debates as to what's right and wrong," said Don Smith, the Marshfield father who waged a four-year effort to get the bill passed after losing his son in a fatal car crash. "It makes the job of police a lot easier. Now it's basically up to the courts."

The Social Host law says adults can be held criminally responsible for providing alcohol to minors and if found guilty could face fines of up to $2,000, one year in prison, or both. It also contains an emergency preamble, which means it took effect immediately after it was signed last Friday.

Smith is confident that judges will enforce the new law.

He fought for the legislation after the June 22, 1996 death of his 18-year-old son Greg, who tried to drive home drunk after attending a party in Cohasset to celebrate his graduation from Thayer Academy.

Greg was killed when his car struck a tree on Summer Street in Marshfield at about 3 a.m. only a short distance from his home.

The party he had attended on the night of his graduation was at a Cohasset home. The host, who stood trial in 1997, was found not guilty on nine counts of providing alcohol to minors and one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Attorney Arthur Shuman, of Pennsylvania, who is the former chief deputy district attorney in Philadelphia, assisted Smith in getting the bill passed by testifying in front of House and Senate committees a little more than a year ago on the effectiveness of the law in his home state.

The Massachusetts law was modeled after the one in Pennsylvania, which took effect eight years ago.

Shuman could not be completely accurate in describing the effectiveness of the law because it was passed in a package with other underage drinking measures, but he is convinced of its importance.

"We experienced a reduction in under-21 drunk-driving deaths by...63 percent in the five-year period after it was passed," he said, adding that the other important law in the package involved drivers license suspensions for underage drinking.

The difference in the two states' laws is that the one in Pennsylvania carries with it stiffer penalties, including mandatory fines, he said.

Shuman said a judge in Bucks County, Penn., recently sentenced a father to 15 consecutive weekends in jail after he was found guilty of providing alcohol to his sons and their friends at a party he hosted last New Year's Eve."The key (in Pennsylvania) is the prosecutors, not the judges," said Shuman. "The key is whether the prosecutors are going to play politics and let people out of these things."

State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, spearheaded the bill in the House. "I think [judges] will enforce it and police departments feel it makes their jobs a little easier by taking away any ambiguity. I don't think there's room for abuse given that the language is very clear."

Chief Brian Noonan of the Cohasset Police Department agrees.

He gave an example of a situation that happened a few weeks ago in which two adults allegedly hosted a party where alcohol was available to minors. Eight people were arrested, but charges against the adult hosts were dismissed because there was no proof that they actually handed alcohol to the minors, according to Noonan.

He said if the Social Host law was in effect, they would have been held liable.

"Judges have a lot of discretion, but this gives us leeway to say, this is what they are charged with, this is what happened, this is the law, whereas before there was a gray area," said Noonan.

Drug and alcohol committee learns about new program drink, parents should be aware they set the "tone and model" for how their children act.

TIPS, which stands for Training Intervention Procedure by Service, was created in 1982 and is viewed as one of the most effective forms of alcohol awareness and training programs in the country. McCann has been certified to teach TIPS since 1984, and puts on the program mainly for restaurant and bar staff, as well as package store employees. The program teaches participants how to recognize physical signs of drunkenness and how to handle non-confrontational intervention. Much like the way taking a driver's education course can lower automobile insurance rates, having a staff with TIPS certification can result in lower insurance rates for restaurants and bars.

Cohasset town policy requires any business or restaurant applying for a liquor license to have a TIPS certified staff.

The Social Host Responsibility bill has been in the works since 1997 and seeks to ensure that an adult who "knowingly and intentionally" supplies alcohol to minors can be held criminally liable and can face fines of up to $2,000, one year in prison, or both.

On the night of July 15, police arrested 23 people — including 22 minors — for alcohol-related crimes in two separate incidents involving house parties.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said educating parents about how to react about the use and abuse of alcohol is important.

"From the brief description I've seen of this program, it could be very beneficial to the parents of teenagers," he said.

The Rev. Cliff Cutler, rector of St. Stephen's Church on Highland Avenue and chairman of the drug and alcohol committee, said the group welcomed McCann to "explore" ways educate parents. The committee's main concern, said Cutler, is to help parents instill a sense of accountability in their children.

"All of us as parents struggle with what is the best way to raise children," said Cutler. He said the group doesn't want to sound "preachy," and instead hopes parents will see the committee as a helpful guide when dealing with these issues.

"We need to help support each other," he said.

McCann said that the TIPS program has three versions: one for on-premises locations, such as restaurants and bars, an off-premises presentation for package stores, and a program for universities and parents. The parental program, though created in the mid-1990s is fairly new to the area, says McCann. According to TIPS, the parental program has a number of objectives.

Identify how parents' attitudes and behaviors reflect on their children

Bridge the parent-child communication gap when it comes to discussions of alcohol use and abuse

Explain how to engage in responsible drinking practices.

Discuss a parents'/hosts' unspoken responsibilities.

Identify behavioral cues when someone has had to much to drink.

Instruction in non-confrontational intervention.

Teach the pharmacological effects of alcohol and its absorption factor in relation to weight, mood, age, etc.

McCann said the program includes informative videos, class discussions, and an interactive portion that has participants rate a person's handling of an intoxicated customer or guest. "At the end, [participants] do get certified as having completed the program," said McCann. Cost of the program is expected to be around $20 per person.

His presentation contains statistics that might surprise participants such as:

Sober drivers hitting drunken pedestrians walking home makes up 11 percent of vehicular fatalities involving alcohol.

38 percent of all motor vehicle accidents are alcohol-related.

In 1998, there were 15,935 alcohol related traffic deaths in the United States, averaging out to 306 deaths a week. "If a jumbo jetliner crashed once a week killing 300 people, there would be outrage," said McCann.

McCann's interest in parental education arose with the combination of underage arrests, not only in Cohasset, but other South Shore towns, as well as the recently signing of the Social Host Responsibility law.

"It all ties together," he said.

McCann contacted the Cohasset police department and was subsequently put in touch with the drug and alcohol committee. He looked forward to his meeting with the committee but admitted not knowing where the group would go with his idea.

Jodi Butman, treasurer of the drug & alcohol committee, said though she doesn't think the alcohol problem in Cohasset is worse than other area towns, she does see the benefit of having such a program available. "The more education parents get, the better off we are," she said.

McCann says he isn't anti-drinking, just pro-responsibility. "There's nothing wrong with drinking; [alcohol] is a legal drug," he said, "as long as you are of a legal age and within the parameters of the law."

Candidates shoot from hip on gun-control issues

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A well-regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms may not be infringed.

The intent behind the second amendment leads to interesting debate from the marble halls of the US Capital building in Washington D.C., to the brick sidewalks of Beacon Hill. It is also being debated along the rocky shoreline of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, where state representative candidates find themselves differing on the state of gun control in Massachusetts, as well as the nation.

Independent candidate Walter Murray of Hull prefers a strict interpretative approach to the definition of a well-regulated militia." Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham believes the second amendment should be interpreted to give the individual the right to own a gun. Democrats Garrett Bradley and Mike Holden, both of Hingham, are somewhere in the middle.

Holden, Bradley and Murray attended the anti-handgun informational forum last month in Cohasset, that was organized in the wake of the "Million Mom March" against handgun violence held this past Mothers' Day in Washington D.C. The meeting featured presentations by a woman whose brother accidentally shot a friend with a family gun; Cohasset Detective Rick Grassie; and John Rosenthal, head of the Newton-based Stop Handgun Violence organization.

"[Rosenthal] explained he himself owns guns and that he is a sportsman," said Holden afterwards. "He's not suggesting people with guns have them taken from them. What they are doing is advocating a reasonable approach to gun safety, which includes things such as safety locks and more stringent oversight in terms of manufacturing...I don't think it's an unreasonable infringement on anybody's rights to require what are referred to as child-safety locks."

Bradley echoed Holden's comments and also advocated the government's right to regulate who owns a gun in the first place.

"I think there are certain things we can do to keep guns away from people who shouldn't have them," said Bradley. "People have the right to own firearms, but people convicted of felonies shouldn't have the right."

Bradley said he saw the effects of gun violence on society when he worked as an assistant district attorney in Brockton. Holden experienced the effects of gun violence first-hand growing up in Fall River. His father was robbed at gun point, and one of his brothers was shot. He also ran into a gun while on the campaign trail, when a homeowner raced up his driveway with a handgun, before tucking it away upon recognizing Holden.

Along with more-stringent enforcement of existing laws, Bradley hopes to see tougher regulations imposed on gun manufacturers, as does Holden. "Toy guns are more closely regulated than real guns," said Holden. Bradley hopes to see more use of "smart-technology" with weapons, such as guns that recognize an owner's palm print, and won't fire unless the owner is holding it.

Both candidates pointed out the amount of injuries to children as a result of handguns is unacceptable. Bradley relayed a statistic saying 12 kids a day in America are killed every day with hand guns, and was quick to point out that handgun violence is becoming a suburban issue. "I think this has been seen across that nation. It doesn't matter where a kid is...this is not just an urban problem."

"Reasonable people who are responsible and have guns in the home that have child safety locks and keep the ammunition separate...should not be made to feel they are doing something inappropriate," Holden added.

But McKenna has a different take on gun-control in the nation.

"When guns are taken away, people's freedoms are taken away, and then what's next?" said McKenna, a staunch supporter in the right to bear arms. She also defended the NRA saying the organization has been misrepresented in the media. "The NRA supports many gun laws among them, laws prohibiting the possession of firearms by certain categories of people such as violent criminals, as well as laws prohibiting sales of firearms to juveniles, among others," she said adding that though she supports the idea trigger locks and proper storage of firearms away from children, she does not favor mandatory storage laws. "It would be impossible to enforce without infringing on people's fourth amendment rights [prohibiting unlawful search and seizure]."

Instead of passing more laws, McKenna would like to see some consolidation of the nation's 20,000 gun-related laws currently on the books, and better enforcement of those laws. She also came out against the mandatory five-day waiting period instituted by the Brady Bill, as well as its supposed benefits. "There hasn't been any proof that the Brady Bill has decreased the level of crime. Crime nationwide began declining two years prior to the Brady Bill passing," she said. "I understand the [cool-down aspect of the waiting period] but I don't think a five-day waiting period should be mandatory for everyone."

Murray said, despite his 12 years of military experience in the reserves and National guard, its "ludicrous" to not have more gun control in the country. "The Department of Justice reported that one out of 17 high school students have carried a handgun in the past month...Another stat said children under the age of 15 are 12 times more likely to suffer from gun violence that the 25 other industrialized countries combined," he said.

Like Bradley and Holden, Murray supports such gun control regulations as mandatory waiting periods, closer regulation of gun show transactions, and manufacturer improvements such as trigger locks and smart-technology. "The expense involved in promoting this safety is nickels and dimes," said Murray.

He also would like to the banning of all assault weapons. "There is no place in hunting or society for AK-47 assault rifles."

Murray based his interpretation of the second amendment on previous Supreme Court rulings that, according to Murray, limits the right to bear arms to militias. "I find it a little outrageous that gun owners and advocates hide behind the second amendment, when it clearly doesn't apply to individual gun owners," he said. "The Supreme Court has interpreted to apply to the right to bear arms under a well-regulated militia, which has been defined to mean the modern-day National Guard. ... You can't convince me that any militia or paramilitary group constitutes a well-regulated militia."

It does to McKenna. "I absolutely do not buy into that [well-regulated militia argument]," she said. McKenna instead interprets the second amendment as giving the individual citizen the right to own firearms.

But instead of gun control, McKenna wishes more attention would be given to the person committing the crime, not the weapon. "I am more in favor of teaching children to respect themselves and each other. The preponderance of inner-city crime is the devaluation of human life. Children are just not taught to value human life," she said. "The gun is merely the tool. If not the gun, then some other weapon... Let the law-abiding, responsible citizens exercise their second amendment right, and let's teach children to value all human life."

Murray half-agreed with McKenna saying society is partly to blame for the increase in gun-related violence, but does lay some blame on the ready availability of the weapons. "The expansion of gun violence throughout the schools, from urban centers to suburban centers, is also a reflection on the breakdown in the American family. [In single parent homes] kids are growing up angry and mean, and when they have access to these weapons they take their rage out on those around them," he said. "Years ago kids were getting into fistfights, not shooting each other...Now they just have access to these guns."

Grassroots anti-handgun group has sprouted

How are [local] police going to keep track?

"Other states should be brought up to Massachusetts' standards."

O'Connell was the one responsible for organizing a Cohasset bus to make the trip to the Mother's Day rally in Washington. "The bus was fairly easily filled and those who couldn't make the trip came down to show their support and send us off."

On July 20, despite concerns that people might be kept away due to vacations, the group organized an educational forum for interested area residents. Their fears were for naught as approximately 50 people from Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham packed the Cohasset Lightkeepers Residence. The forum included guest speakers John Rosenthal, who founded Stop Handgun Violence in 1995 along with the late Michael Kennedy, and Mary McDonald, brother of author Patrick McDonald, who wrote the critically-acclaimed story about growing up in Boston "All Souls," as well as local candidates Garrett Bradley, Mike Holden, Ted LeClair and Walter Murray.

"[Because of the turnout] we thought we really had to become a bona fide group," said O'Connell.

Stop Handgun Violence, according to Afshar and O'Connell, plans to join with a nation-wide group, Americans for Gun Safety, this fall. At that time, the Cohasset group will be known as Stop Handgun Violence-South Shore. "We want to expand from Cohasset throughout the South Shore," said O'Connell.

Afshar thought part of the group's initial appeal might stem from its grassroots beginning.

"We're giving people empowerment; letting them know they have a say," she said.

Cohasset gun ownership statistics

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie said police have issued 181 firearm permits. Permits are divided into four classes; A, B, C, and D.

Grassie said 90 class A permits have been issued, allowing the person to carry a concealed, loaded weapon. Included are the 18 gun-carrying members of the Cohasset police department. Those applying for class A permits must give a reason why he or she is applying for the "Cadillac of permits," as Grassie called it. Unlike in the past, "protection" is no longer an acceptable reason. Grassie said police Chief Brian Noonan reviews all applications for those applying for class A permits and asks, "Why does this person need to carry a high-capacity weapon." Besides the police force, Grassie said permits are typically granted to people with jobs requiring a gun be carried, such as an armored car guard, a security guard or a jeweler that carries around briefcases containing diamonds.

Sixteen Cohasset residents have class B permits, for weapons with 10 rounds or less. Grassie said this is the normal permit given to those for hunting and target-shooting purposes. A class C permit is a basic Federal Identification (FID) card that allows U.S. citizens to purchase rifles and shotguns but not handguns. So far, 72 class C licenses have been issued. Class D licenses pertain to chemical repellants such as pepper spray. Just three Cohasset residents own these permits.

According to Grassie, when compared to surrounding towns, Cohasset has a lower license-per-person ratio. Det. [Cary] Coveney in Scituate is buried with applications," he said. "Hingham has more than us. Even Hull has more."

Grassie said that if he caught someone with a loaded gun in a bar-room at 1 a.m., and had only a Class B license, he would have the right to arrest that person, but not revoke his permit. Under the 1998 state gun control law, only the town that issued the license has the legal ability to suspend or revoke a permit.

Grassie, a member of the Cohasset police department since 1977, said the last time someone was killed in Cohasset due to a firearm was at least 15 years ago. "It's not like in Boston where you seem to have four or five shootings a week."

The database available for the police department does not keep track of how many guns a person can own, but can indicate to police if a gun license has been registered to a particular address. "If I have a call to 20 Smith Place, the dispatcher can plug in the address and it will come up with a big red box, saying caution a gun could be at this house."

Grassie answered questions about gun statistics in Cohasset at the anti-handgun forum held last month at the Cohasset Lightkeepers Residence.

Cemetery plan clears hurdle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An expanded Woodside Cemetery took a big step toward fruition this week when the zoning board granted special permits for the project.

Cemeteries are allowed in all zoning districts by special permit. The project also needed zoning relief because a portion of the cemetery would be in the flood plain.

Under current plans, there is space for 500 new graves on two acres. There would also be about 530 linear feet of columbarium walls with niches for about 1,000 urns.

Plans were to install vaults for the graves during construction but that is no longer feasible, cemetery committee chairman Glenn Pratt said this week.

He explained that the town department of public works might not be always be available to lift the vault cover off every time there is a burial. Also, some people may want special vault covers with inscriptions. Pre-installing the vaults would have allowed for more density.

The news pleased the zoning board that was concerned about density and having the cemetery look too urban.

Pratt said a memorial garden is planned for the far end of the expanded section of the cemetery with a monument to the town's Gold Star Mothers, who lost sons in wartime.

In the new area, plans are to restrict the type of monument with some flat ones being required to create a more open look.

Pratt said the next step is to schedule time with selectmen to set the stage for town meeting that will ultimately have the say on whether the project estimated to cost about $600,000 will go forward. Pratt said the income from the sale of graves and columbarium space would pay for the debt service.

Selectmen were receptive to the proposed expansion plans last February when they encouraged Pratt to return after he'd seen the other boards.

The board of health and conservation commission have also given the project the go-ahead.

Two-family home status in limbo

not grandfathered because the house wasn't used by non-family members before the 1969 by-law that changed the required lot size, Egan said.

So one of the issues, the zoning board is grappling with is whether an apartment created in a single-family house, which is used for family members that are part of the same household, qualifies as a two-family use under the zoning by-law.

Zoning board members said if the Hassans could produce a building permit then the issue might be moot.

Under state law, if a building permit were issued for the two-family addition, then the use could be protected if no one took action to discontinue the use within six years.

But back in the 1950s, selectmen acted as building commissioners, so it is not clear if a building permit was issued.

Sam Hassan said he would contact the builder to find out. But frustrated by what they see as lack of action by the zoning board, the Hassans said after Monday's deliberation they may take the town to court over the matter.

Aaron Hassan said there were three other homes on Arrowwood Street that have been converted into two-family dwellings. The zoning board that has 100 days from the date the appeal was filed to reach a decision will continue deliberating on the issue at its September meeting.

Mother's support

If you are a woman who has decided to alter your career path in order to care for your children at home then you should know about Mothers and More.

Mothers & More provides a sense of connection for women balancing the roles of woman, mother and professional.

The purpose of the non-profit organization is to offer support for "sequencing women-mothers": those who have altered their career paths in order to care for their children at home. Mothers & More addresses women's personal needs and interests during their active parenting years, advocates for public and employment policies that accommodate sequencing, promotes recognition and respect for sequencing mothers and recognizes the right of all women to choose if and how they combine parenting and paid employment.

The new South Shore chapter meets the second and fourth day of each month at 7 p.m. at The First Early Intervention Facility, 574 Main Street (Route 18), Weymouth.

This month's topics of discussion will be:

Aug. 14 - "Who am I ? Recreating your identity now that your life has changed"

Aug. 28 - Brainstorming session for future meeting topics/guest speakers.

Plymouth's Grist Mill became a Warner Brothers movie set as shooting continued Friday on "Osmosis Jones" starring Bill Murray and Molly Shannon.

There's something about Plymouth...

South Shore residents play role in new Farrelly Brothers film

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Farrelly-fever has broken out in the town of Plymouth — and the rest of the South Shore for that matter.

For the past few weeks, the fraternal filmmakers and Duxbury natives Bobby and Peter Farrelly have been shooting their new movie "Osmosis Jones" at various location in America's Hometown. The new movie stars Bill Murray and Molly Shannon.

For those who may not be familiar with the dynamic film-making duo, the Farrelly brothers have brought the hilarious hits "There's Something About Mary" and "Me, Myself, and Irene," to the big screen. For "Osmosis Jones," the two have returned to familiar territory, and the local residents who have landed roles as extras and the family that handed over their home for use in the movie have welcomed them with open arms.

Plymouth resident Arthur Budge and his wife Diana volunteered their home to the film's cause, while Kingston residents Brianna Cabral, 8, and her sister Ashley, 12, snagged small roles in the movie as extras.

Brianna even had the chance to challenge Bill Murray to a basketball game.

Brianna Cabral, 8, of Kingston gets a squeeze from actor Bill Murray during the shooting of "Osmosis Jones," in Plymouth. Brianna and her sister Ashley, 12, landed roles as extras in the new Farrelly Brothers film when Warner Brothers used their school science projects as props on the movie set.

Hanging out at the film set and hoping for an autograph are Farrelly brothers and Bill Murray fans Jim Costello and Anthony Knasas of Hingham. The Farrelly's and Murray have been in Plymouth over the last few weeks shooting scenes for the new film "Osmosis Jones."

"I yelled over to Bill and I said 'Hey Bill, how about after we film you and me go shoot some hoops?.'" Brianna said. "He looked at me and he said 'Bring it on girl, bring it on.'"

Brianna and Ashley never expected to land parts in the new Farrelly film, but a couple of science projects they did at school helped them land extra parts in the new flick. According to Veronica, the girls' mom, Warner Brothers was looking for science project props and a family member clued the film company in about Brianna and Ashley's work.

"They asked if they could use the science projects my daughters made," Veronica said. "Then they ended up asking if the kids that made the science projects wanted to be in the movie. It really kind of fell into their laps."

Veronica said she spent eight days at the Nathaniel Morton School in Plymouth with her daughters, the location where the science fair scene was shot.

"It was really exciting," Veronica said. "There weren't a lot of people hanging around down there, but it was interesting to see how that was all done."

"They only needed me for about 15 minutes for the filming," Brianna said. "But it was still really cool."

The Cabral sisters' said their experience was a thrilling one.

Just up the road a ways, the Budge family said their brush with Hollywood was equally unforgettable.

Big music, Little Feat

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Little Feat's touring Europe this fall, but first the band that made Dixie Chicken a household recipe (along with Tennessee Lamb) will serve up a tasty show in Cohasset.

Little Feat plays the South Shore Music Circus, Saturday bringing with them new songs and the vintage rock and roll music that they unleashed in the early 1970s.

"We always have a good time in Cohasset," said Little Feat guitarist/mandolin player Fred Tackett. " We always make sure it's one of our regular stops, and we're real excited to see everyone."

Tackett said the band's current tour promoting their new album "Chinese Work Songs" began this month, and it will take them through Thanksgiving. On the way, the tour will take the band to some interesting places.

Come September, the band will be playing in places like Ireland, the United Kingdom, Germany, Denmark, and even Bosnia.

Tackett said recently, Little Feat even played a gig in Kuwait, and a number of troops set up small communes for the show.

"People were camped all over the Israeli border," he said. "It was a very cool thing. It was like being on the moon with 148-degree weather."

Despite the band's full schedule of tour dates, Tackett said he always takes his non-stop lifestyle with a grain of salt.

"I kind of get up every day, and my road manager slips a note under my door to say what city we're in," Tackett quipped. "We have a great time on the road."

And they have done so for almost 30 years.

Little Feat will perform old favorites and new songs from the new album Chinese Work Songs at its South Shore Music Circus show, Saturday.

The foundations of the band formed in 1967 with late Little Feat founding member Lowell George. Tackett said he met George in Los Angeles at that time.

"Lowell was playing with (Frank Zappa's) Mothers of Invention back then," Tackett said. "He was playing the sitar. We became real buddies."

After that, Tackett said he also met people like Ritchie Hayward, Billy Payne, and Roy Estrada, all who were founding members of Little Feat.

"We always have a good time in Cohasset. We always make sure it's one of our regular stops, and we're real excited to see everyone."

Little Feat guitarist/mandolin player Fred Tackett

Although Tackett did not join Little Feat as a full-time member until 1987, he remarked "I always hung around those guys. All the songwriters in that part of the country hung around together. It was a natural thing."

Even though Tackett was not a full-time member of the band, he frequently played on the band's albums. During the years when he was not a permanent fixture in Little Feat, Tackett found time to do is own solo work, and also work with a number of musicians like Bob Dylan, Fleetwood Mac, and even Glenn Campbell.

Tackett made his full-time debut with the band in 1988 when Little Feat released their 11th album, "Let It Roll." And the rest is history.

Like Tackett himself, Little Feat has had its share of collaborations with renown musicians including Bob Seger, Jimmy Buffet, BB King, Eric Clapton, Robert Palmer, and Bonnie Raitt among many others.

"We always considered those people our friends and colleagues," Tackett said. "We spent time with all of those people during the 70s. That's what that decade was all about — all the friends, all the recording, all the time. It was always really informal. There was never really much thought about it."

Now, with the dawn of the new millenium, the band is enjoying the success they always have with the unique Rock-Folk sound they helped trademark three decades ago.

"Everything's pretty much the same as it always has been," Tackett said. "But these days, when we're playing live, we've been doing a lot more improvisational jamming."

The current band members include Paul Barrere (guitar/vocals), Bill Payne (keyboards/vocals), Shaun Murphy (vocals), Sam Clayton (percussion/vocals), Kenny Gradney (bass/vocals), Ritchie Hayward (drums), and Tackett. Former Little Feat members include Lowell

4-Minute Chicken Cutlets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Geri Giannandrea

I am appalled at the lengths some folks will go to get dinner on the table fast, gulping down frozen dinners, jarred spaghetti sauce, bad take-out Chinese food, and the ubiquitous Domino's pizza. I am no food snob. I love a burger as much as the next carnivore – but I am wedded to home-cooked home cooking for reasons of taste, health and well, philosophy. So, in order to compete with the likes of Wolfgang Puck's frozen pizza, I set out with a near-impossible task. Could I create a recipe for a homemade chicken dinner that would take 20 minutes or less, including all preparation and cooking? The answer was a surprising and delicious yes!

My first thought was that skin and bones would have go in order to speed up cooking time. That left me with boneless, skinless cutlets. But chicken breasts can be quite thick, and they would never cook in just a few minutes. So after a bit of testing, I decided to slice them in half horizontally to make them thinner and quick-cooking. The next barrier to quick and easy cooking was the unevenness of the chicken breast. I found it necessary to quickly pound the thicker parts of the breast so that the sliced cutlets were an even 1/4-inch thick.

A hot sauté pan was the likely cooking utensil because it is fast and easier to manage than a broiler or hot oven. But thin, naked cutlets would dry out quickly in a hot pan. My solution was to devise a simple coating for the cutlets to keep them juicy and add some textural contrast as well. The first choice was dried bread crumbs but they were a bit dull. A combination of grated Parmesan cheese and bread crumbs was better, providing both flavor and a crispy coating. I then tested egg whites, whole eggs, and then no eggs at all as a coating before adding the bread crumb/cheese mixture. The whites were the winner – the whole eggs made the coating too thick and heavy and without any egg, the cutlets were bland.

Because of the large amount of cheese, I found a nonstick skillet to be essential. Hot oil is crucial to developing a nice crispy crust. To determine whether the pan is hot enough is to add the olive oil, heat the pan over medium-high and wait until the oil starts to smoke. Now you know the pan is ready. The cooking time was fast, 3 to 4 minutes total, and I found that I could handle two cutlets at a time, enough for one person.

Now that I had a lightning-fast chicken recipe, I wanted to make a whole meal of it. A bed of arugula arranged on the plate with one sliced tomato worked nicely. These are then drizzled with extra-virgin olive oil and balsamic vinegar and sprinkled with fresh tarragon leaves. The hot chicken cutlets are then placed on top. Serve this quick dinner with a fresh baguette and a fruity wine and you have a quick from-scratch dinner, a whole lot better than any frozen pizza, even Wolfgang's!

4-MINUTE CHICKEN CUTLETS

A chicken breast is usually considered to include both halves which means two breasts. Use very fine store-bought bread crumbs for this recipe instead of fussing with homemade. You can skip the bed of greens if you like although peppery arugula adds a lot to this dish. The idea for this recipe was inspired by "New Food Fast," a wonderful cookbook by Donna Hays first published in 1999 in Australia.

4 split chicken breasts (2 complete breasts)
3 large egg whites
3/4 cups freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1/2 cup fine dried bread crumbs
6 tablespoons olive oil
3 cups arugula or tender greens of your choice (optional)
4 small to medium tomatoes
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 bunch tarragon (or basil)
Extra-virgin olive oil for drizzling
Balsamic vinegar for drizzling

1. Cut each whole breast in half (ending up with 4 pieces) and cut each individual breast in half horizontally. Pound each of the 8 pieces to an even 1/4-inch thickness. (Pounding in between 2 pieces of plastic wrap works best. Use the bottom of a small saucepan in a pinch.) In a small bowl, lightly whisk the egg whites with a fork. Combine the grated cheese and bread crumbs in a shallow dish or pie plate. Make a bed of 3/4 cup of the optional greens on each of 4 dinner plates. Slice the tomatoes and place on top of the greens. Drizzle with oil and vinegar and season with salt. Scatter the tarragon leaves (or basil) over the tomato.

2. Heat 4 tablespoons olive oil in a 10-inch nonstick skillet over medium-high heat until just starting to smoke. Meanwhile, season two pieces of chicken on both sides with salt and pepper. Dip each piece into the egg whites and then into the cheese/crumb mixture, pressing on the chicken to collect a thick coating on both sides. Place the chicken in the heated pan and cook 1 1/2 to 2 minutes on each side, or until deep golden brown. You can cut into a piece of chicken to check for doneness—it should be just cooked through and juicy. Remove to paper towels to drain. Repeat with the remaining pieces of chicken, adding the additional olive oil when necessary. On each of the 4 dinner plates arrange 2 pieces of hot chicken over the tomatoes and arugula. Serve immediately. Serves 4

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 9

Influences today are ideal for vacationing. The moon travels in upbeat Sagittarius, active until 4:14 p.m. The polarity of Mercury/Neptune culminates at 4:36 p.m., urging you to keep it light and don't take anything or anyone too seriously. This is not a time to deal with practical matters or make business decisions. At 10:25 p.m. the planet Saturn moves into the sign Gemini. Saturn will stand at the first degree of Gemini for the next 9 1/2 weeks. It will bring new responsibilities and concerns for people born on the early cusp of Gemini, Sagittarius, Virgo and Pisces.

THURSDAY, AUG. 10

The planet Mercury is in high profile during the next couple of days. That means that the focus is on communications. This is a time to promote your ideas; write letters, send packages. Mercury aligns with Mars this morning, warning against fast driving, debates. Situations can quickly get out of control. Take it slow and easy. The Sagittarius moon continues inactive travel until 2:44 p.m., when it enters Capricorn. Applying alignments of the sun/Uranus and Mercury/Jupiter can make for an exciting, anything-can-happen evening. Go with the flow.

FRIDAY, AUG. 11

At 2:02 a.m. the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive for the remainder of today and tomorrow. Launching ventures, signing contracts are definitely off limits. However, this period holds high potential for productivity. Capricorn is one of the most ambitious signs of the zodiac. An applying alignment of Mercury/Pluto aids projects that need trouble-shooting, problem-solving. Keep an open mind. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter.

SATURDAY, AUG. 12

A mixed bag of planetary influences makes for an interesting day. The inactive moon travels in conservative Capricorn. On the other hand, alignments of Venus and Mars to Jupiter prompt you to forget your troubles, let fun and games top your agenda. A full moon is building up, adding energy and intensity to the weekend.

SUNDAY, AUG. 13

At 3:43 a.m. the final windup to this month's full moon begins, when the moon enters Aquarius. Its influence may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be more spontaneous and adventurous. Influences are prime for socializing, partying. However, there is one rough spot in effect between 6:35-9:35 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Mars occurs. Slow down.

MONDAY, AUG. 14

This day may be full of surprises. Stop, look and listen. Think before you act. The Aquarius full moon continues to build, making for a high energy, emotional, volatile day. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until Friday, when favorable influences occur. A challenging 90-degree alignment of Venus and Pluto warns you to eliminate negativity in your life, particularly in relationships. Forgive and forget past grievances; clear the decks and start anew.

Yard Rock takes its show on the road

Music circus concert is a 'Night Out' for blues fans

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

For the past decade, the Yard Rock in Quincy has been the outlet of choice for local live-blues fans looking to spend a night out. Now the shipyard club is giving "A Night Out" back to its patrons.

Not just the club's patrons, but actually anyone interested in live, Yard Rock-style, smoky-club blues in the breezy intimacy of the summer tent setting. The Yard Rock: "A Night Out" hits the stage at the South Shore Music Circus , Tuesday, July 15 at 7:30 p.m., a recent, mid-season addition to the SSMC schedule with a local flavor unlike anything ever seen previously at the tent.

The show marks the Yard Rock's debut on the local concert-theatre circuit, not counting, of course, the annual City of Presidents Blues Festival which the club has held at Quincy's Veterans Stadium for the last eight years. But like the blues festival, the Music Circus date promises to live up to the Yard Rock name and reputation on every level.

"The main deal, of course, as it has been from the time we first opened the Yard Rock eleven years ago, is keeping the blues alive. We're compelled to keep the blues alive, and this first step in a move beyond the club confines could be our biggest business yet in accomplishing that task. We're making a big-time commitment in that direction."

Yard Rock owner Joe Hajjar

The musical bill includes a first-rate collection of New England-area, clubrockin' blues/R&B acts and friends of the Yard Rock who've frequented both the club and its annual festivals. Featured are acclaimed soul-shouting headliner Mighty Sam McClain, blues diva Toni Lynn Washington, swing-blues octet The Love Dogs and Quincy blues-guitar ace and Yardrockers house band leader Steve Murphy, with his special guest, singer/guitarist and weekly Yard Rock regular Ricky "King" Russell.

"The Yard Rock has begun to grow beyond the boundaries of just the small club across from the shipyard," said Yard Rock owner and Night Out Executive Producer Joe Hajjar, of Quincy. "It's gotten to the point where it's getting that drawing power and name punch and people recognize it on the area entertainment scene. It's a good time to talk to people at area venues like the Music Circus about doing club-sponsored live dates and expanding the horizons."

"The main deal, of course, as it has been from the time we first opened the Yard Rock eleven years ago, is keeping the blues alive. We're compelled to keep the blues alive, and this first step in a move beyond the club confines could be our biggest business yet in accomplishing that task. We're making a big-time commitment in that direction," Hajjar said.

The Yard Rock proprietor further describes "A Night Out" as a sort of hometown show, acknowledging the idea as something that's rarely, if ever, taken place at the Music Circus, and adding that the tent-theatre presentation is relying on what the Yard Rock image and concept "has laid down" as a foundation. What is sure to be one of the show's highlights is the plan for Mighty Sam McClain and Toni Lynn Washington to be performing together onstage, a first time occasion that offers a bonus to each singer's regular solo set.

What McClain and Washington also have in common is breakthrough success and critical acclaim on the national blues circuit coming only in recent years, after decades of obscurity while working as singers at various levels of the music business and looking for the big break. McClain is an old-school soul/blues-man whose powerhouse vocal style has been compared to Otis Redding, Bobby Blue Bland and Little Willie John, but what many of the singer's mostly newfound legions of fans don't know is that he's been slugging it out in the business since almost the prime-era days of those performers.

One of Mighty Sam's earliest singles, 1966's "Sweet Dreams," became a regional hit for a small Southern soul label, and the singer followed soon after with his debut at New York's legendary Apollo Theatre. Following that, however, were many years of struggle for notice as a singer in various spots around the country while working a series of long-term day jobs to make ends meet.

Finally in the mid 80s, McClain, who now lives in New Hampshire, launched a succession of critically praised soul/blues CDs for the independent AudioQuest label, and has slowly gathered recognition as one of the finest contemporary blues/R&B vocalists. The singer's latest disc offering, Blues For the Soul, his first for the Telarc Blues label, is being hailed as his finest effort to date. And even prime-time television has lent recognition, as McClain's song "New Man In Town" has popped up on the soundtracks of several Ally McBeal episodes.

Washington also has a career that stretches back to the mid 60s, when the singer appeared on The Steve Allen Show and toured both the Southern roadhouse circuit with the likes of Jackie Wilson and Sam & Dave, and the U.S. and Asia with USO-sponsored, Vietnam-era entertainment shows. Based in Boston since the late 80s, Washington has recorded a series of critically praised blues/R&B CDs for the Newton-based Tone-Cool label and currently tours clubs, theatres and festivals both locally and nationally.

The Love Dogs are another Tone-Cool act who specialize in a jumpin', jivin' swing/blues sound that's a guaranteed good time for all and, having formed in Boston in the mid 90s, also anticipated the trend of bands such as the Brian Setzer Orchestra and Cherry Poppin' Daddies by a good couple of years. Murphy and Russell are both regular crowd-pleasers at the Yard Rock, while Russell also has several independent CDs to his credit.

Hajjar suggests that as the first step toward expansion for the Yard Rock, the Music Circus "Night Out" is just the opening of a vast array of possibilities.

"People have asked me about opening Yard Rocks on Cape Cod, in Plymouth, Southboro and even New York City. And all of these are strong possibilities. I personally feel that with the Yard Rock's backing, we could send a steady stream of New England blues acts down to the club scene in New York and kick butt. But for now, the main concern is the question of does the Yard Rock have value as a brand name, and I think it does. Other blues clubs that have sprung up in the Boston area in recent years have essentially emulated what the Yard Rock has laid down," he said.

The Love Dogs, Toni Lynn Washington and Mighty Sam McClain are all on the musical menu for the Yard Rock's Night Out concert at the South Shore Music Circus.

Clever design ideas can pay off

How to make summer living space more comfortable, marketable

One of the real joys of summer is the vision of lazy warm days spent relaxing in a hammock or chaise lounge, casual family meals enjoyed al fresco, and festive barbecues for friends and family on the patio or deck.

Whether you have an outdoor space such as a porch, patio, deck, or poolside area to expand your summer living space, or an indoor one such as an enclosed deck or sun porch that lets you bring the outdoors in, you should make the most of not so obvious decorating possibilities.

Whether you have an outdoor space such as a porch, patio, deck, or poolside area to expand your summer living space, or an indoor one such as an enclosed deck or sun porch that lets you bring the outdoors in, you should make the most of not so obvious decorating possibilities.

Doing so can boost the sale price of your home as buyers look for interesting features in these spaces meant for relaxation. Plus, there are inexpensive ways to give an area a new and more appealing look.

These spaces are not just extensions of your living quarters, but extensions of your personality as well, and they should be given the same attention to design as other rooms of your home.

According to the design experts, creating a strong decorating statement for these spaces involves a lot less effort and expense than more conventional areas of a home.

Any innovations that can be achieved in this area will be well worth the effort if your home is on the market and being viewed by prospective buyers. Make the most of what you have.

Any innovations that can be achieved in this area will be well worth the effort if your home is on the market and being viewed by prospective buyers. Make the most of what you have.

Think strong and vibrant color as a fitting complement to the greenery and vividly colored flowers that surround your home.

Summer is the ideal time to revel in rich, bold colors such as deep pink, apple green, aqua, bright yellow, and lively blue, accented with lots of crisp white, all of which appear in collections (of various national and local companies) of fabrics, wallpapers and ready-made home fashions, in prints, solids, stripes, and plaids.

Red and yellow prints are popular in the summer and fall. Printed sheer fabrics behind drapes make the best summer transition to the porch. These same fabrics add color and can be practical when used outdoors as mosquito net around porch dining tables.

Decorating your porch or patio couldn't be easier. If you already have outdoor furniture in usable condition, perhaps all they need are colorful cushion covers.

Don't forget to redo the cushions on the chaise lounge or porch swing as well. If you have ordinary looking chairs, consider slip-covering the entire back and seat in a pretty fabric.

When making your own porch furniture cushions, select fabrics that can hold up despite the weather. One hundred percent polyester thread is recommended, which is rot and mildew-resistant.

Cushion covers should be made removable for easy cleaning. Zippers may be the least weather-sturdy fastener, so it may be best to stay with buttons, ties or velcro on outdoor cushions.

Whether or not your home is surrounded by lush flower beds, you should incorporate an array of beautiful floral patterns in your decorating scheme.

Fabric companies offer a range of exuberant floral designs which, when coordinated with smaller-scaled floral or plaid patterns, make a bold summer statement.

If your indoor or outdoor furniture doesn't need a total make-over, maybe all you need is some great new decorative pillows in fun prints and patterns.

Just as in more formal rooms, sometimes simply a change in accessories can transform a space from dull to dramatic and convince that homebuyer who's just looking around, to purchase your home.

IN BRIEF

Coletta top broker

Michael Richardson, president, Crescent Realty Group, recently announced that Michael Coletta is the top broker for the first half of 2000.

"This is quite an achievement," said Richardson. "Mike is number one in both listings and sales."

"This recognition comes as no surprise," commented Laura Crosby, vice president. "Michael is an outstanding Realtor who has worked hard for this recognition."

"We are really happy for Mike," remarked Bob Salamone, director of education. "He has received many awards throughout his career and each of them has been well earned."

Release of Carol Bulman's book celebrated

Conway Financial Services president Carol Bulman signed copies of the second edition of her book, "Mortgage Sense," at a recent reception at the Jack Conway & Co. headquarters in Norwell.

Several dozen CFS personnel, Conway agents, banking executives and mortgage industry representatives marked the book's release and received advance copies of the consumer manual.

James Dougherty, president of the Massachusetts Mortgage Association, praised the updated and expanded volume, which now has 10,000 copies in print. Other attendees included George DeMello of Plymouth Mortgage, Cheryl Webb of the Mortgage Guaranty Insurance Corporation and several local attorneys.

Bulman who is the incoming chair of the MMA, said "Mortgage Sense" provides information on calculating affordability, new construction loans, low-down-payment and government programs (including Veterans Administration mortgages), renovation financing and options for first-time buyers.

Other chapters of the book explain the differences between fixed- and adjustable-rate loans, the purpose of title insurance, how much information you need to apply for a loan and a typical loan's closing costs.

Chairman Jack Conway said each of the real estate firm's sales offices has a supply of the books available for customers. He said he agreed with the assessment of syndicated real estate columnist Ken Harney, who called Bulman's book "The best and most understandable book on mortgages I've ever read."

"This is a fabulous source of information," Conway said, "and we encourage anyone who has questions about the process of financing a house to read it."

For more information, or to request a copy of the book, call CFS at (888) 831-1181.

Conway Financial Services president Carol Bulman of Scituate (seated, center), signs a copy of her new book, "Mortgage Sense," for her parents, Jack and Patricia Conway of North Marshfield. A recent reception to celebrate the book's release, hosted by the Jack Conway real estate firm, was well attended by members of the lending and real estate industry.

Fabulous foliages for color throughout the season

Part 3—Gray, Silver and Blue-green tinted plants

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As I glance out my window on this early August morning, the scene is reminiscent of the landscape in early June. The lawn is a lush green carpet and the perennial border is dense and luxuriant. Having just returned from a week among the sand dunes on the Outer Banks of North Carolina, the dramatic contrast in scenery creates a feeling of having journeyed from the desert into a tropical rain forest. What a difference from a year ago, when drought-stricken lawns and gardens were crispy and beige and only the weeds and crabgrass were green and thriving.

Green

Mother Nature has provided generous moisture this summer season, enabling those plants which were ravaged by infestations of spring canker worms or weakened by last summer's drought to regrow and recover. Successive seasons of defoliation and drought might have resulted in many a tree's demise, but with the unusual quantity of monsoonal moisture, many of these woody plants should stand a fighting chance. Plentiful rainfall does have a tendency to leach nutrients from our soils, especially if they are sandy in nature, requiring an additional application of fertilizer which would often be unnecessary during a typical summer growing season.

Despite the lack of warmth and sunshine preferred by many warm-weather crops and annuals, the perennial border seems to be thriving, with many plants demonstrating an extended bloom period and considerable new growth. Although unsightly mildew is predictably rampant this damp season, the borders remain cheerful with brightly-colored clumps of tall phlox (Phlox paniculata), purple coneflowers (Echinacea), balloon flowers (Playtcodon), black-eyed Susans (Rudbeckia) and lingering daylilies.

While many gardeners are content to plant any and all colors of these flowers side-by-side, cottage garden style, without regard to specific color combinations, others are more sensitive to how each plant's color blends with its neighbor's. For those of us who enjoy all colors but cringe when particular colors appear next to one another, the use of intermediary foliage helps to knit unlikely colors together. Plants having gray, silver or blue tinted foliage are particularly useful as neutralizing and unifying elements in the perennial border.

There are a great many plants having gray and silver foliage, the large majority of these being sun-lovers with a preference for drier soils. A wide variety of herbs including lavender, Russian sage (Perovskia), santolina, yarrow (Achillea), and catmint (Nepeta) are valuable additions to both the herb garden and the perennial border. Artemisia, Sedum, Veronica incana, snow-in-summer (Cerastium) and lamb ears (Stachys) can serve as ground covers. Dusty Miller, a hardy annual which often survives the winter, has especially lovely, lacy foliage for use in the border or in containers. Another excellent addition to a border or container is the vigorous licorice plant (Helichrysum) whose trailing habit makes it useful as a ground cover or cascading over the edge of a whiskey barrel. Repetition of these silver-foliaged plants along the border will provide the element of rhythm and unify your plantings.

For the shady border, where vibrant flowers tend to be less evident, plants having silver foliage add sparkle and brighten low-lit corners. Many exciting new cultivars of lungwort (Pulmonaria) have been introduced which exhibit large, silvery leaves. Japanese painted ferns are a personal favorite and are particularly handsome alongside the rich bronze foliage of many of the new Heucheras like H. 'Chocolate Ruffles'. The Lamium family offers several attractive varieties which tolerate even those challenging dry, shady environments beneath maples, providing low, spreading mats of foliage which persist well into the colder months.

Plants which boast blue-green or blue-gray foliage add a soothing touch to the sunny border and a welcome contrast to the yellow-green leaves which predominate in the landscape. Evergreen woody plants offer numerous choices including many types of junipers, cedars, spruces and pines. Dianthus cultivars are particularly worthy additions to a sunny, well-drained border where their colorful, aromatic blooms brighten the June garden and fill the air with a spicy fragrance. Their foliage remains evergreen for year-round interest. Several ornamental grasses contribute similar hues including blue oat grass (Helictotrichon), blue fescue (Festuca) and Panicum 'Heavy Metal'. Rue (Ruta), several cultivars of fringed bleeding hearts (Dicentra), and baby's breath (Gypsophila) also provide this attractive, refreshing foliage color to the border.

The shady border would hardly be complete without a few representatives of blue hostas. At their best in total shade, cultivars such as 'Hadspen Blue', 'Blue Wedgewood', 'Halcyon', 'Blue Moon', and 'Blue Angel' add a distinctive, appealing touch of color. The lacy foliage of Corydalis and fringed bleeding hearts offer a marvelous textural contrast and continuous bloom for an attractive display throughout the summer.

As you prepare a new garden or revise an established border, consider adding several colorful foliage plants to your design. Your reward will be an exciting, colorful composition for all seasons.

Prime Real Estate

Rare village estate

This beautiful 10+ acre property is situated at the end of a lane abutting a golf course and several ponds. Tall pines provide a very private estate, and all new professional landscaping highlights the grounds, including stone walkways and lush flowers.

Constructed in 1985, this Campbell-Smith home boasts quality craftsmanship and superb architectural details. The 13-room home has a clapboard exterior and 6,000+ square feet of living space. The unique open floor plan includes five bedrooms, 3.5 baths, fireplaced living room with pond views and atrium doors to a new deck, fireplaced dining room and a designer kitchen with center island and countertop range. The family room features a dramatic two-story cathedral ceiling and also has pond views. A new billiard room with built-ins is exquisite. The guest suite includes two bedrooms and a full bath.

A library with a wooden paneled fireplace features a uniquely carved scripture and private access to a circular brick wine cellar. The second floor has an elegant fireplaced master bedroom with an adjoining sitting room also with fireplace, palladian window, his and her dressing rooms, tiled bath with marble vanity and sunken tub. Two additional bedrooms, a full ceramic tiled bath, and second-level laundry room complete the living area of this spacious home.

This home lends much flexibility for an au pair, guests, in-home office or the growing family. A magnificent estate, which is a rare opportunity in this fine seaside community.

South Shore Real Estate

Easement can protect a house with a view

BY ANTHONY SUMMERS
CORRESPONDENT

Incredible as it may seem, sometimes a written provision means precisely what it says. However, some of us suffer from denial, and we delude ourselves by substituting what we would like for what really is.

A dispute over who was really entitled to a very special ocean view, formed the basis for the Land Court case of Daniel Cotton, Trustee vs. Keith Moskow, Trustee of Black Dog Realty Trust.

Background

In 1926 Charles Gammons owned a peninsula known as Rice Island in Cohasset. Gammons divided the peninsula into several lots known as numbers 1, 2, and 3. Lot 3 lay at the end of the peninsula, between lots 1 and 2, and the open ocean.

At the time of the creation of the lots, the deed to lot 3 contained the wording "That upon said lot (3) there shall not be erected or placed any structure of any kind other than...open wire fences...not over 6 feet...and walls not over 3 feet...There shall not be placed upon said lot (3) such trees, shrubs or other improvements as would obstruct the view of the water..."

The restriction was to remain in force for 999 years, commencing March 20, 1917. On June 22, 1966, Gammons conveyed Lot 3 to the Cottons. In 1987 Moskow purchased Lot 2. Moscow's house enjoyed a spectacular ocean view across Lot 3, only because building was restricted on Lot 3.

Anthony Summers

On Aug. 20, 1997, in an attempt to increase the value of his lot, Cotton filed a Petition to Remove Obsolete Restrictions from the Certificate of Title. Moskow, seeking to protect his water view filed an answer in opposition.

Arguments

In support of his Land Court Action, Cotton referred to M.G.L. c 184§ 26, known as The Restrictions Statute, the intent of which is to "remove obsolete, uncertain, or unenforceable restrictions from Certificates of Title." Moskow argued that the Restrictions Statute was inapplicable and that Gammons' 1926 Lot 3 restriction was in effect an Affirmative Easement of View, running in favor of Moskow's Lot 2.

Discussion of law

"In 1890, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes stated, "The right to have land NOT built upon, for the benefit of the light, air, etc. of neighboring land, may be made by an easement within reasonable limits, in a deed."

The general rule is that an "easement is perpetual unless its duration is qualified in the grant of the easement." In creating a 999-year term, Gammons' intent was to keep the view across Lot 3 open and unobstructed.

Decision

The Land Court concluded that the 1926 Lot 3 building restriction recorded in the Registry of Deeds, was an easement created to benefit Moskow's lot, and was therefore enforceable against Cotton's Lot 3.

Cotton's attempt to erase the restriction was unsuccessful. Cotton loses, Moskow keeps his view. Cotton will not be allowed to build upon Lot 3.

Legal advice

When Cotton purchased Lot 3 in 1966, he was clearly aware of the restriction. In fact, he sat on the vacant land for 30 years.

Undoubtedly, his waterfront lot would have great value with a new home built on it. The hope of achieving a windfall probably prompted Cotton to commence the Land Court action. However, when a restriction on use is clear, and accomplishing a purpose considered reasonable and of benefit to another lot owner, the courts will always honor that restriction.

Who can blame Moskow for fighting to preserve his special ocean view. In 1820, Lord Byron described an ocean view this way. "Be thou the rainbow to the storms of Life, the evening beam that smiles the clouds away, and tints tomorrow with a prophetic ray."

Information is current as of Aug. 4, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Easement can protect a house with a view

CORRESPONDENT

Incredible as it may seem, sometimes a written provision means precisely what it says. However, some of us suffer from denial, and we delude ourselves by substituting what we would like for what really is.

A dispute over who was really entitled to a very special ocean view, formed the basis for the Land Court case of Daniel Cotton, Trustee vs. Keith Moskow, Trustee of Black Dog Realty Trust.

Background

In 1926 Charles Gammons owned a peninsula known as Rice Island in Cohasset. Gammons divided the peninsula into several lots known as numbers 1, 2, and 3. Lot 3 lay at the end of the peninsula, between lots 1 and 2, and the open ocean.

At the time of the creation of the lots, the deed to lot 3 contained the wording "That upon said lot (3) there shall not be erected or placed any structure of any kind other than...open wire fences...not over 6 feet...and walls not over 3 feet...There shall not be placed upon said lot (3) such trees, shrubs or other improvements as would obstruct the view of the water..."

The restriction was to remain in force for 999 years, commencing March 20, 1917. On June 22, 1966, Gammons conveyed Lot 3 to the Cottons. In 1987 Moskow purchased Lot 2. Moscow's house enjoyed a spectacular ocean view across Lot 3, only because building was restricted on Lot 3.

Anthony Summers

On Aug. 20, 1997, in an attempt to increase the value of his lot, Cotton filed a Petition to Remove Obsolete Restrictions from the Certificate of Title. Moskow, seeking to protect his water view filed an answer in opposition.

Arguments

In support of his Land Court Action, Cotton referred to M.G.L. c 184§ 26, known as The Restrictions Statute, the intent of which is to "remove obsolete, uncertain, or unenforceable restrictions from Certificates of Title." Moskow argued that the Restrictions Statute was inapplicable and that Gammons' 1926 Lot 3 restriction was in effect an Affirmative Easement of View, running in favor of Moskow's Lot 2.

Discussion of law

"In 1890, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes stated, "The right to have land NOT built upon, for the benefit of the light, air, etc. of neighboring land, may be made by an easement within reasonable limits, in a deed."

The general rule is that an "easement is perpetual unless its duration is qualified in the grant of the easement." In creating a 999-year term, Gammons' intent was to keep the view across Lot 3 open and unobstructed.

Decision

The Land Court concluded that the 1926 Lot 3 building restriction recorded in the Registry of Deeds, was an easement created to benefit Moskow's lot, and was therefore enforceable against Cotton's Lot 3.

Cotton's attempt to erase the restriction was unsuccessful. Cotton loses, Moskow keeps his view. Cotton will not be allowed to build upon Lot 3.

Legal advice

When Cotton purchased Lot 3 in 1966, he was clearly aware of the restriction. In fact, he sat on the vacant land for 30 years.

Undoubtedly, his waterfront lot would have great value with a new home built on it. The hope of achieving a windfall probably prompted Cotton to commence the Land Court action. However, when a restriction on use is clear, and accomplishing a purpose considered reasonable and of benefit to another lot owner, the courts will always honor that restriction.

Who can blame Moskow for fighting to preserve his special ocean view. In 1820, Lord Byron described an ocean view this way. "Be thou the rainbow to the storms of Life, the evening beam that smiles the clouds away, and tints tomorrow with a prophetic ray."

Information is current as of Aug. 4, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%-5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM=adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV=loan to value. MI=mortgage insurance. NA=not available. NQ=rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. There's something about Plymouth...

the Budge's Oak Street home and made it veteran actor Bill Murray's movie residence. The Budges, had no problem budging — they willingly relocated during the shoot. They moved into a trailer in their son's nearby yard.

"It was funny how they came to film in our house," Arthur said. "My wife was in the back yard, and the Warner Brothers people just approached her. She told them she'd have to talk to me, but I said I had no objection."

Arthur said he was paid for the use of his home, but he preferred not to say how much he was given.

"My grandson was visiting that day and he answered the door," Diana said regarding the moment when the movie representatives approached her. "A woman who I know came in with a lady named Pam from Warner Brothers, and she asked me about using the house. Apparently, they had been riding around looking for the perfect house, and it turned out to be ours. But I was just in disbelief."

Ironically, Diana said movie representatives had been in her and her husband's trophy shop (Plymouth Trophy and Awards) days before they approached her. They apparently needed some trophies for props in a particular scene.

"It was strange how we kept running into those kinds of instances," Diana said. "Both times, these things happened right out of the blue."

Even though their home was considered to be a closed set, Arthur said they were allowed to go in, check their messages, and do other small house related tasks.

"It definitely was not an inconvenience at all," Arthur said. "We treated it like we were on vacation."

"They took our house and transformed it into (Bill Murray's) bachelor pad," Arthur added. "So they had to make it kind of messy. My wife is concerned that people will see the movie and think that's what our house looks like all the time."

"I'm a nasty neat freak," Diana jokingly added.

Arthur remarked when he visited his home during the filming, the set included having half eaten sandwiches and other clutter lying around everywhere.

STAFF PHOTOS/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Diana and Arthur Budge had no trouble budging from their Oak Street home in Plymouth when Warner Brothers asked to make their house, the residence of actor Bill Murray in the new Farrelly Brothers film. The two own and operate a trophy shop on Court Street in Plymouth.

"They basically took a truck load of stuff and put it all over the house," Arthur said. "But part of the deal is that they clean it before they leave."

Despite the Hollywood version of interior decorating, the Budges have no complaints.

"They were all just normal people," Arthur said. "We had no problem with them. And that Bill Murray, well he's outrageously funny."

Arthur said he noticed at one point during filming that Murray would practice his golf shots in a yard at one of his neighbor's homes between scenes.

"Bill Murray is as funny off camera as he is when he is on camera," Diana added. "He is quite a character, and the Farrellys are very congenial people. This whole experience has been very exciting. It's a whole new thing."

Airlines often don't respond to complaints

By George Hobica

Q. I read your response recently to the person who had a problem with TWA. Unfortunately, writing to customer service will do them little good. I wrote to the president of TWA regarding a similar problem two months ago and have not received the courtesy of an answer; nor do I expect to, judging from what I have seen of that airline.

I was coming back to Boston from New Orleans through JFK with no change of planes and we were held up for six hours in New Orleans due to bad weather (thundershowers) in the Northeast. When we finally boarded at about 7:30 p.m., I asked the flight attendant if the flight would go on to Boston. He was noncommittal, but didn't say no. That's just it, no one knows anything.

We got to New York at 11 p.m., and when I asked about those going on to Boston, all I got was blank stares. The rest of the night was a disaster of lines and bad information. All the hotels in the area were full, so I spent the night on the terminal's floor.

To me, this is not a weather issue. If they had been open and honest in New Orleans I would have stayed there rather than being stranded in New York.

A. It is often hard for weather experts, let alone airline employees, to predict the weather, but that's no excuse for not responding to your complaint about how this was handled.

See the next item for how to complain to the U.S. DOT. Also, to arm yourself next time you fly, visit the FAA's very useful weather delay Web site at http://www.fly.faa.gov where you'll find real-time air traffic delay information, including weather delays, for major airports. If you see that there's a major problem you can make plans accordingly.

Q. I had problems on a US Airways flight recently and would like to know what address I should write to for both US Airways and the Department of Transportation so I can voice my complaints. I am very mad about this, but wanted to wait so I could calm down a little.

A. Calming down is always a good idea when writing a letter of complaint to an airline. It also helps to know what your rights are, so request a copy of the airline's complete (not abbreviated) "contract of carriage" and cite specific rules that pertain to your situation when you write.

Here are the contacts you requested:

For the U.S. DOT:

Aviation Consumer Protection Division, U.S. Department of Transportation, Room 4107, C-75, Washington, DC 20590; (202) 366-2220.

For US Airways:

US Airways Office of Consumer Affairs, P.O. Box 1501, Winston-Salem, NC 27102-1501; (336) 661-0061; fax: (336) 661-8031.

Q. While in London earlier this summer, our guide told us that the plexiglass "capsules" on the London Eye Ferris wheel, which is sponsored by British Airways, did not open, and during the hour-long ride, the sun raised the inside temperature to over 100 degrees, causing riders to suffer from heat exhaustion. I would be interested in any information you can gather regarding this ride.

A. I've been assured by a British Airways spokesperson that all problems with the London Eye ride, which affords remarkable views of London, have been fixed and it has proved immensely popular.

Q. I just finished reading your response to the 82-year-old woman who needed to travel to New York City from the West Coast due to her sister's death. I find it interesting that the public feels the airlines should be required to offer bereavement fares.

When my sister was murdered at age 25, I never even considered asking for any discounts. My only goal was to get home and get there as fast as I could, and I paid over $1,500 to travel from Tucson, Ariz., to Salina, Kan., and was just glad there was a seat. The department store didn't give me a discount because I needed to buy a black dress.

When my husband died, I paid $575 an hour to rent a casket, with no "bereavement" discounts. And the newspaper didn't give a discount for the death notice.

George Hobica

Your suggestion of senior coupons (as a way to reduce the cost of last-minute travel) was the only good response you gave.

(The writer is an airline employee.)

A. What you say is true, but the airlines do give discounts when it suits them for much less-noble reasons than to relieve the stress of someone suffering through a terrible tragedy.

Another reader wrote to ask about how to buy senior coupons. They're available from most major airlines, in sets of four one-way domestic flights (two coupons are usually needed for flights to Hawaii). To buy them, call the airlines' toll-free numbers or contact your travel agent.

Big music, Little Feat

After 30 years touring and recording, Little Feat's still on its feet. The group is bound for a European tour in the fall but will make a stop in Cohasset first.

George, Roy Estrada, and Craig Fuller.

Despite the fact some of the founding members of the band are not present anymore, the sound of the band's new album is in the tradition of the group's other records.

"The new album is like raging Jazz-Rock music," Tackett said. "There's a lot of good stuff on there." Tackett said there are a couple of cover songs included on the new record as well as a number of originals.

One of those covers includes of version of The Band's "Rag Mama Rag." Tackett said The Band was a group which Little Feat always admired.

"They were big influences on our music," Tackett said. He added other covers on the new album include a version of "Sample in a Jar" by Phish and "Gimme a Stone" by the Hooters.

"The new album just symbolizes this year's batch of songs," Tackett said. "We're always writing."

Tackett said it won't be long before another Little Feat album takes shape because each member of the band is always working to come up with new material.

"A lot of times, we'll all write songs individually," Tackett said. "We sit at home and just come up with different grooves. When we all get together to work on stuff, we all do kind of a 'show and tell' with the songs we're working on."

Tackett said Little Feat has a four-CD box-set coming out on Sept. 20 which will feature a lot of the band's old outtakes and demos. Its tentative title is "Hotcakes and Outtakes." They also have a new DVD which will be on the market soon.

As to why Little Feat's appeal has lasted for so long, Tackett joked "I guess it's because we're all so good looking." He added "Seriously, I think our music is an individual kind of music. The music is just a little bit quirkier and a little bit out of the ordinary, and besides, many of the people out there have grown up with us."

He concluded "We just can't wait to get to Massachusetts. We're thinking about you all, and we're chomping at the bit getting ready to get there."

For tickets or for more information on the Little Feat show on Aug. 12 call the South Shore Music Circus at (781) 383-9850.

TRIAD program takes off

Provides help for seniors

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset TRIAD program, just months into its existence, is already catching on with seniors, says Council on Elder Affairs director Kathy Bryanton.

"It's going very well," she said unable to contain a smile. "We had a very good turnout for our last meeting, approximately 30 people was the head count."

TRIAD is the brainchild of Norfolk County Sheriff Mike Bellotti, and is an attempt to create a joint-effort between the town's police and fire departments and the sheriff's office in order to provide crime prevention tips, and other quality of life services to the community's elders.

"The whole concept of the program is to help people remain safe and independent in their own homes," said Bryanton.

Bellotti asked Cohasset, which is in Norfolk County, unlike Hingham and Scituate which are part of Plymouth County, to join the program this spring. Bryanton

Area citizens want new Logan runway stopped

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

More residents are noticing noise from jet traffic these days — whether on the high school soccer fields, walking or jogging at World's End or visiting Nantasket Beach.

Thus, some South Shore residents oppose adding Runway 14/32 to Logan Airport, saying it would negatively impact a number of communities, including Hingham, Scituate, Cohasset and Hull.

"The South Shore had better wake up," said Eric Oddleifson of River Road. "The new runway would triple the number of aircraft approaching over the South Shore."

Cohasset may follow Hingham's lead and form a jet noise task force of its own. Selectman Ronnie McMorris recently put out the call for volunteers interested in serving.

"The South Shore had better wake up. The new runway would triple the number of aircraft approaching over the South Shore."
— Eric Oddleifson of River Road

Nancy Timmerman, MassPort noise and abatement supervisor, isn't surprised South Shore residents have been noticing more jet traffic, particularly lately.

"Planes get their best performance with the wind in their 'faces' — or with southwesterly winds," which occur during hot, sultry weather, she said.

South Shore communities are affected more than usual under those conditions, she noted.

Hingham task force members contend that new traffic to and from the runway is aimed at the South Shore, according to maps from MassPort's recent draft environmental impact statement.

Cohasset insists Arrowood septic systems be moved

Says proximity to reservoir threatens water supply

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

As hope fades to purchase the lots in question, the Cohasset Water Commission wants ten septic systems in the proposed 17-home Arrowood Estates subdivision in Scituate moved farther back from the Aaron River Reservoir.

To that end, commission chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said he is consulting with town counsel to see what legal action the town might take to force the builders to relocate the septic systems, all of which are already installed.

"We meet all the rules and regulations. To try and penalize us at this point is kind of a slap in the face."
— Stephen Bjorkland, developer

This would be a last-ditch effort by the town to halt the part of the project, which the water commission insists could be a real threat to the town's water supply if the septic systems failed.

Plans that were floated recently included Scituate and Cohasset asking their respective Town Meetings for appropriations to buy the land that could cost as much as $3 million. Through the purchase, Scituate would gain direct access to Wompatuck State Park and Cohasset would get protection for its water supply.

But the window to purchase the 10 lots closest to the reservoir is closing although the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs has

Funding picture comes into focus

Unorthodox plan appears to work

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

When Town Manager Mark Haddad and the school committee got together last spring and crafted the school department's FY01 budget, they took a chance.

The town purposely "under-funded" the school budget by close to $300,000 hoping to make up the difference at the fall town meeting using surplus cash. The danger was, if the town's final free cash numbers came in low and state aid also was lower than expected, an override would be needed to cover the difference.

But it appears that won't be the case.

"Based on preliminary figures, we're going to do what we said we were going to do," said Haddad.

Initial returns show the town collecting nearly $300,000 more than expected between car excise taxes, building permit fees and investments. Chapter 70 educational funding from the state came in at $200,000 more than Haddad budgeted for. The town will also receive more in METCO funding than originally thought.

The creative funding plan was the brainchild of Haddad and finance director Michael Buckley.

"Part of the reason we did that was there were so many uncertainties — we didn't know how much free cash we would have, we didn't know our state aid numbers, we didn't have a handle on the final book. Plus last year, by the time the schools were done with registration in September and October, they had blown all budget projections," he explained.

Last year, the school system ended up with a $380,000 special education deficit that needed a spe-

Library chairman likes town's grant chances

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@CNC.COM

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Board of Trustees Chairman Patience Towle said she is encouraged with the town's chances of being awarded the needed state grant for the new $2.9 million town library slated for the former Osgood School.

"We believe our project will be approved as it stands now," said Towle. She said the trustees spent months analyzing the new library's needs in order to "get the best possible plan."

In her opinion, because the town took the time to have the plans informally reviewed by the state's assistant construction supervisor, and have remedied all possible problems, the Cohasset project should receive approval.

Towle told selectmen last week the budget inclusion for library construction grant funding was passed at the last-minute, literally – it was approved at 11:30 p.m. on July 31, the last day of the legislature's formal session.

She said $12 million in grants will be available for the "first-round" of awardees.

"We hope very much to receive funds at that time...We're doing everything possible to make it."

Town Manager Mark Haddad agreed that Cohasset's chances are extremely good. "My feeling is we're way ahead. We have an approved design. It's been approved by town meeting. We have a very solid application."

Applications for the grants are due into the eight-member Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners on Jan. 18. Towle urged selectmen to decide what will be done with the rear wing of the former school, which will not be used for the new library, so it can be included with the application.

"We just want as complete an application as possible," she said. "It's acceptable now, but would just be better with it."

Reuse possibilities include senior housing and a new police station, but Towle would prefer to see the children's museum proposed by Leah Roy at the site.

Roy has proposed a privately-funded $1 million renovation of the wing for the purpose of creating a two-level, 6,000 square foot children's museum.

"In terms of benefits to both the organization and to the community, to have a resource like that, and have it immediately adjacent to the library would be wonderful," said Towle.

Acting Selectmen chairman Fred Koed suggested that proponents of the various reuse proposals come before the board at its first September meeting, so a final decision can be made, and a request for proposal can be sent out in time for inclusion during the fall town meeting.

The town has been informally told that a police station at the site would hurt its chances of receiving a grant.

Town Meeting approved a three-step funding plan for the library, that would not pass the project's cost onto the taxpayers. The plan counts on a $1.45 million grant from the state to pay the lion's share of the project, with the rest of the money coming from $700,000 in private donations, and the sale of the current library building which was appraised by the town at $700,000 in 1998.

Towle reported that the trustees have already raised more than $400,000 and expect to surpass their goal. "I'm trying to be polite and business-like, but we are very excited," she said. "We are thrilled. It's very gratifying."

This week in COHASSET

Health fair

Cohasset Elder Affairs, the South Shore Community Center, the Social Service League and Cohasset Board of Health will sponsor a "Health, Wellness and Recreation Fair" on Saturday, Sept. 9 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The fair will be spread out between the common, Depot Court and Constitution Park.

Events scheduled are a radar and baseball exhibit run by the Cohasset TRIAD, and pony and moon rides.

Procurement Laws

A change in the state's procurement laws will give Town Manager Mark Haddad the ability to pick and choose companies to award town contracts.

The change requires any project over $25,000 to be put out for an open bid, instead of $10,000 under the old law. What the change means, if the town needs to spend $12,000 to paint street lines, Haddad is now able to pick three companies and request a bid for the job. State law still requires him to pick the lowest bidder.

By being able to choose local contractors, Haddad said he will be able to keep money in the town,.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Aug. 22.

Feral cats

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Murray delivers check for water department

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray brought some good news to Cohasset Town Hall Monday.

She hand delivered a check from the state for $234,718 that represents a lump-sum payment in lieu of yearly grants to help pay for the water treatment plant built in 1978.

The plant was built in part with a federal and state grant, so the state has been paying about $14,800 annually to the town that goes towards its share.

About a year ago, the state Department of Environmental Protection decided to clear the books, so to speak, of a handful of these old grants, including Cohasset's, by making a lump-sum payment instead of continuing to pay a little every year.

Water commission chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said use of the money may be restricted to pay down the debt or for capital improvements to the water treatment plant.

"How the money can be spent is a little up in the air," he said. But, nevertheless, McNabb is thrilled with the news.

Water commission chairman John K. McNabb and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray hold a state check that could go toward retirement of debt on the water treatment plant or infrastructure improvements.

"It will help us to keep doing improvements without raising water rates," he said. "We are grateful to Mary Jeanette who helped push this through.

"It's not every day you get $200,000-plus."

Mobil Mart clerk calls 9-1-1 to alert police

Norwell man arrested for attempted rape

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A Norwell man could continue to be held without bail at the Dedham House of Correction on charges of charges of kidnapping and attempted rape of a 28-year-old Hull woman.

An all-night clerk at a local convenience store who called 9-1-1 may have helped the woman escape her alleged attacker, police said.

A bail revocation hearing is slated for today (Aug. 17) for Jeffrey D. Lincoln, who plead not guilty at his arraignment on the charges Tuesday in Quincy District Court.

Lincoln, 22, of 70 King's Landing, was out on bail on similar charges from an incident in May involving a different Hull woman when he was arrested this week, police said.

Responding to a call at 12:30 a.m. Monday, Cohasset police officers William Quigley and John Small were dispatched to the parking lot at the Mobil Mart at the corner of Rte. 3A and Sohier Street where they met a female who was visibly shaken, Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

"She stated she was forced into a car in Hull and assaulted," Noonan said. "She was then taken to an area in Norwell and returned back to Cohasset where she was able to get out of the vehicle."

Quigley said the alleged victim told Lincoln she had to use the rest-room.

The all-night clerk at Mobil, Kenny Khalil, who called 9-1-1, sensed something was wrong shortly after Lincoln and the woman came into the convenience store.

"He stopped the car outside," Khalil recalled. "She came in to use the bathroom and he went to buy cigarettes."

Khalil, whose uncle owns the store, said she asked to use the telephone behind the counter but he explained to her that customers are not allowed behind the counter. Kahlil said he offered her money to use the payphone outside but she indicated she had enough change.

"She went out and I felt something was wrong, so I went outside and saw he did not give her a chance to call," Khalil said. "So I asked 'are you all set?' and he told me to go.

"She followed me inside, she was crying and he took off," he said. Khalil then tried unsuccessfully to get the license plate number and called 9-1-1.

Noonan said the woman was at the Dry Dock, a bar in Hull, earlier that evening with her boyfriend who went outside the bar after an argument.

"On a guise, this fellow (Lincoln) said he wanted to bring her out to her boyfriend to settle the argument and then forced her into his car where the incidents happened," Noonan said. Noonan said the assault involved groping and attempted rape and started immediately after she was forced into the car.

He said the woman and her boyfriend, who had noticed Lincoln at the bar, were able to make a positive identification.

"Yesterday (Monday) we sought a warrant for his arrest," Noonan said.

Lincoln was arrested at 8 p.m. Monday at his home by Norwell and Cohasset police.

Lincoln was charged with kidnapping, indecent assault and battery of a person over 14, assault and battery, and assault and battery with intent to rape.

In May, Norwell police arrested Lincoln on charges of kidnapping, assault and battery, indecent assault and battery of a person over 14 and threats to commit a crime following another incident involving a Hull woman who was at the same bar.

According to Norwell Police Chief Robert Galvin, the victim of that incident got into her vehicle willingly with Lincoln, but was then allegedly assaulted by him after they reached the area of Kings Landing in Norwell.

Galvin said Lincoln refused to let her go, assaulted her and then threatened her.

Following that incident he was arrested and arraigned in Brockton District Court, and was released on $10,000 cash bail.

AROUND TOWN

ALL-STARS SHINE!

Cohasset's 10 year old All Star Team (East) gave their coach Bill Grimm, a very special birthday present on Thursday evening by winning the Championship Baseball Game in Stoughton. During the playoffs, they had a nail-biting win over Scituate, then beat Rockland and finished the season with Coach Grimm's gift! This is their second championship in a row!!!!! The team players are: Tommy Chase, Sam DeGiacomo, Pat Doonan, Mike Grimm, Brian Hill, Justin Hollis, Chris Mills, Cody Morgan, Cliff Musto, Kyle Pinkus, Chris Rose and Dave Snowdale! These guys have done a fantastic job! They would like to thank their coaches, Bill Grimm, Mark DeGiacomo and Bill Hollis for all their dedication to developing great attitudes and skills which helped the boys have such a fun and successful season! The team also wants to acknowledge their appreciation to Lynne DeGiacomo and her team of parents who provided transportation to all the games and thank the fans and Cohasset Travel for all their support! You guys are all terrific. way to play!

TOO MUCH RAIN

Hello Everyone! Is anyone else getting just a little discouraged with all of this RAIN? The end of the summer is getting closer and some nice weather is certainly due! Were any of you out there lucky enough to attend the show at the Music Circus last Friday night? Pat Benatar was absolutely awesome but the best part for me was the opening act with Cohasset's very own Maura Young! Maura sang several of her own songs and was perfect in every way. The love and support shown to her by the audience was truly amazing, her family and friends in awe as she belted out these tunes. Maura, you are an inspiration to many, seeing your goals and not giving up on them was what put you in this spotlight! I am sure that we will hear from you many times in the future! Your family, friends, admirers and town are all very proud of you!

PETS ON PARADE

Woof, Meow and maybe a few Ribbits! That is what we will hear on Sept. 9 at 1 p.m. as the participants and spectators gather for the First Pet Parade, sponsored by the South Shore Community Center nursery school. This event is being held on the Town Common, directly opposite the Town Hall. The cost for all participants is $10 and the monies raised will be used for the refurbishment of the playground at the nursery school. Bring your pet, a neighbors pet, a relatives pet or a stray! If you don't have a live pet, bring a stuffed animal that you love! Dress them up any way you like and get ready to march and wave to all the adoring fans. There will also be a bike section in which participants can decorate and ride their bikes, trikes or wagons! The Brownies and Cohasset's very own band, "The Rusty Skippers" will also be marching and playing some tunes. Please contact Molly McGowan with any comments and questions at 781-383-2080.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy Birthday Wishes go out this week to a very sweet little girl! Miss Meghann Salerno celebrated B-Day number 7 on Aug. 15. Meghann is the daughter of Tim and Liza Salerno and I am sure a wonderful day was had by all! Happy Birthday, Meghann.

KEEPING IN TOUCH

I received a great email this week from Ali Crehan, a 1989 CHS graduate. Ali missed her reunion last year and has been bumping into many CHS classmates quite a bit. She has noticed that there are many "Cohassentes" from all over the place who have registered on various websites to talk to people and let them know how they are. She thought it would be a great idea, as do I, to have one centralized location for all Cohasset people to come to from all over, to come to and say hello. This new club functions allow you to post messages, share pictures, chat and so on. Anyone with computer access can register and view this site by searching for: http://clubs.yahoo.com/clubs/cohassethighschool. I think that this is another wonderful way to keep in touch with our friends and neighbors, whether they are right here in town or half way across the world. Give it a shot.

BARBECUE SUPPER

Get ready for a feast! The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding a Barbecue Supper on Aug. 19 at 6:30 p.m. The church is located at 51 Church St. The dinner will include barbecued chicken, coleslaw, potato and macaroni salads, dessert and a beverage. Dessert choices sound wonderful, blueberry pie, blueberry sundaes or blueberry shortcake. Ticket reservations must be made by calling 781-383-9131, the cost is $8 for adults and $4 for children. All are welcome and it sounds like a lot of fun.

FUTURE SELECTMAN

CALLING ALL WALKERS

Calling all walkers! Prepare now for the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. Last year, 56 residents from Cohasset and Hingham walked from Hopkinton to Boston in the 11th Annual Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. With funding needs for cancer research on the rise, the Jimmy Fund is hoping to attract more walkers from Cohasset and Hingham for the Sept 24 event! The goal is for 8,000 walkers to raise more than $3.3 million for the one-day event. Each walker needs to qualify by raising $100, and all are being asked to "go the extra mile" and become a PaceSetter- a walker who raises $500 or more. These special walkers will receive special recognition at the finish line. They will also receive a special club T-shirt and be invited to a reception held in their honor in the Spring. For more information on how to join the fight against cancer, call 1-800-632-3562 or visit www.jimmyfund.org. Let's get walking!

AUDITIONS SET

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is holding auditions for its production of Neil Simons Plaza Suite. The auditions will be held at the Cohasset Town Hall on Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 21 and 22. The requirements call for 7 men and 5 woman ages 20-50. For further information, call 617-750-8987.

GARAGE HOURS

Here is some great information for the teens of our town! The Cohasset Youth Resources is announcing the remaining summer hours for the Teen Center Garage. The hours are Mondays and Wednesdays from 3-8 p.m. and Fridays from 5-10 p.m.. On Friday, Aug. 25, The Garage Summer Slam! for grades six-12. This is a Sandy Beach Volleyball Tournament followed by the Summer Slam Dance from 7-10 p.m. The cost is $15 per person and you can sign up individually or in a team of four people. If you sign up early for the tournament, you can go to the dance for free!

COLLEGE HONORS

Congratulations go out to Rebecca Lynne Callentine, a 1994 graduate of CHS! Rebecca received her Bachelor of Science in Nursing from Mount Carmel College of Nursing in Columbus, Ohio. Rebecca was a National Honor Society scholar and graduated cum laude. She has accepted a position in the Pediatric Intensive Care Unit at Columbus Children's Hospital.

I want to take this time to talk about something that is a huge worry and concern of mine. Over the last couple of months, I have been hearing and seeing some issues that really are upsetting to me. The children, teens and young adults of our town are a huge part of all of our lives in one way or another. There are times when they do things that we as adults do not approve of, and I don't think that any of us can be so blind as to say, "it will never be my child who drinks underage, defaces public property or does something else that is unacceptable." My oldest son has just turned 10 and I am slowly allowing him to venture out on his own. I am sure that I will have some "issues" with him at some point with his behavior or attitudes as we all do as parents. As much as I want our talks and lessons to make an impact on what he chooses to do, I am not foolish enough to say it won't happen. What is important to myself and I am sure many of you, is to know that we as a town, can watch, help and assist when needed, and not always point the fingers at the "bad parents or the local police" but work together to keep our children safe and out of trouble. This became apparent to me just recently, when I was at the ball field and saw three young boys using the picnic tables as jumps for their bike tricks. When I asked them to put the tables back and stop riding their bikes, they laughed at me and continued this behavior. Knowing who these boys were, and I am sure the parents would be amazed at who they were, all I had to do at that point was to say, "should we call mom and dad?" and that was the end of that. This example is minor in comparison to drinking and drugs, but these boys are nine, if we don't start now, what will happen in five more years. Please, let's all work together to keep our children happy and healthy, if we as parents show responsibility and respect to others, hopefully, our kids will to. Instead of putting blinders on, we all need to open our eyes and not work against each other as we all want the same outcome for our kids, for them to be what we are, parents with the most wonderful gift of all, our children!

That is all the news for this week. Remember to send any news to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or 622 CJC Highway. — Jennifer Piepenbrink

Green eggs are local eggs

Beechwood house is home to special some chickens

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Yes, Dana Cushing sells green eggs.

And no, he doesn't have any pigs with green bacon.

"Wouldn't that be terrific," he says with a smile.

Cushing has "20-odd" hens in his backyard menagerie, to complement the half-dozen rabbits and two goats.

If someone was to look closely at the hens' legs, they would notice that three of them have legs with a greenish hue.

"The leg color is indicative of the color egg," said Cushing. "These are the Araucana hens — and they lay green eggs."

Cushing lives in a circa 1870s farmhouse on the west section of Beechwood Street — an area formerly known for its farms — with his wife Mary Ann and son Jesse.

He bought the house in 1992, and said the two-plus acre yard, at that time, was "a wreck." He spent a number of years just cleaning up the yard and was able to construct a 400-foot stone wall from the rocks he removed from the ground. The property's original barn is still standing, though now refurbished.

The long, narrow dogleg-right yard features plenty of green space to run around, as well as a vegetable garden, and blueberry and raspberry bushes.

Cushing is also well known for his extravagant birdhouses, and has extended his carpentry skills to a full-size treehouse, complete with a deck and tower.

At the corner where the yard begins its turn are the animal pens. And what lucky animals they are. The two goats, one of which is owned by his next door neighbor, have indoor sleeping quarters along with a 50-foot long play area, complete with rocky ledges to climb.

The rabbits inhabit a two-level, four-room hutch, with hollowed out logs to climb through and more logs that form stairs which provide access to the pen's different levels.

But it's the chickens that have the most impressive living arrangements.

The hens, and their one lucky rooster, have two all-season pens, surrounded by chicken wire all around, including in the ground. The coop complete with a stained-glass window has two rooms with wood perches for the birds to snooze on, as well as boxes to lay eggs in.

The pen is residence to seven varieties of hens: Buff Orpington, Light Brahma, Rhode Island Red, Barred Rock, Black Sex Link, Golden Lace Wings, as well as the aforementioned Araucana.

Cushing bought his first chicks from Fitts Mill in Scituate four years ago, in conjunction with his neighbors the Costellos. Though he is the half-owner, Cushing, owner of his own painting company, built the pen and coop, and is responsible for the daily care of the chickens.

Interestingly, Cushing has no official carpentry training, yet built the animals' housing himself. "I kind of learned it from here to there," he said. "When I bought the house, the barn roof had fallen in." Cushing, along with some of his friends, restored the 200-year-old barn into working order, with Cushing doing a good deal of the roofing and shingling.

"I had lots of interesting stuff around. I just wanted to give him some of the things that made me feel special growing up."
— Dana Cushing of Beechwood Street

He grew up in the Norwell House, on Norwell Avenue in Norwell, which was in the Cushing family for many years. Cushing said his father was an avid car collector, and he grew up surrounded by antiques. It was his brother who owned chickens growing up, so Cushing learned all about them.

"I had fond memories growing up...I wanted my son to have some of the same experiences," he said. Though Cushing admitted that playing zookeeper is really his hobby, he justified it by expressing his desire to create a "magical feeling" in his backyard for his son, now nine.

"I had lots of interesting stuff around. I just wanted to give him some of the things that made me feel special growing up."

Cushing also has a 20-year old daughter, Catherine LeBlanc, and both of his children have had encounters with the yard's rooster. Jesse and his friends frequently get chased by it. Catherine once ran at it in an attempt to scare it but the rooster instead ran straight back at her.

"It turned the tables on her," said Cushing with some amusement in his voice.

According to Fitts Mill owner Tara Devine, the Araucana hen can lay an egg ranging from green to light blue.

"I don't know the specifics but it's how they've been bred. Some chickens lay brown eggs. It lays green ones," she said. The bird is named after the Chilean tribe it was originally discovered with.

Strangely, some of its anonymity is because of the egg itself. "It's eggs are a little bit smaller [than normal chicken eggs]," making it impractical to breed commercially, said Devine.

"Besides, can you try to imagine some one going to buy a dozen eggs and seeing a dozen green ones?"

She said her store does sell the chickens, but mainly to people with backyard coops.

Cushing says the chickens produce three to five dozen eggs a week — more than his family can consume. "You can only eat so many eggs," he said. The remaining eggs are usually sold for $2 a dozen, or occasionally donated to the local food pantry at the Second Congregational Church. He has a few intermittent customers in town, and Jesse could be seen this summer selling eggs to a neighbor's lemonade stand across the street.

"They cost a little more than if you went to the supermarket, but the ones you get there are a week old," he said. "These eggs are fresh this morning."

He is quick to say this is not a business for him, as the money he takes in for eggs doesn't even offset the cost for feed.

"[The chickens eat] 10 gallons of pellets [and] 10 gallons of scratch a week," he said. According to Cushing, favorite snacks for the chickens include corn, bread, pasta and cereal, as well as the traditional cracked corn or "scratch."

"It gives them something to do besides peck each other," he said.

The Araucana's eggs taste no different than a more familiar egg — it just looks different on the outside. But unfortunately, Cushing said the hens aren't providing.

Cushing's wife Mary Ann also is a big fan of the birds.

"Chickens are really wonderful creatures," she said.

She also likes what it brings for the area's children. "It's really great for the neighborhood kids. A study said that a person's best childhood memories take place out in nature."

Jesse Cushing holds a chicken in his backyard on Beechwood Street. Some of the Cushings' chickens lay green eggs.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Making a point

It started out as a slow news week. That's why we decided to attend the Government Island Study Committee last Thursday — a committee, that quite honestly, we've never covered before.

But what we discovered is newsworthy. We learned the GISC has a beef with selectmen. And while we don't necessarily agree with its members' views on the Lighkeepers Memorial and other issues — we think they have a point.

The appointed committee's purpose is to advise and provide recommendations for Government Island — a town treasure. The "island" that borders Bailey's Creek and the harbor has a rich history and as a result, a few years back was named to the National Register of Historic Places.

While elected boards have more authority, the town depends on myriad appointed committees that spend countless volunteer hours studying and advising on issues and projects.

Some committees, such as the cemetery committee that searched for years to find a suitable site for a new cemetery, have shown remarkable resilience in the face of numerous setbacks.

So rather than waste the time of these volunteers whose efforts might be better placed elsewhere — selectmen ought to invite some town committees to their meetings from time to time.

That might be the best way to determine if the committee should continue and if so, what the protocol should be if a project or issue falls under that committee's non-binding jurisdiction.

Mixed messages

The drug and alcohol committee has enthusiastically embraced the opportunity to host an alcohol-awareness program, called TIPS for Parents.

TIPS, widely recognized as a leader in educating those in the restaurant, lounge and package store business on how on to serve or sell alcohol responsibility — also offers a program for parents on how we send mixed messages to our kids.

As TIPS instructor Edward G. McCann Jr. said, our children learn by the examples we set.

"Kids say, 'Daddy did it, how come he's mad at me?'" Mr. McCann said.

The program is not one that preaches just say "no" but works to help parents bridge the communication gap that exists when talking about alcohol — while making sure they understand how their actions and attitudes affect their children.

We think anything that helps spread the word about the alcohol problem is positive.

As Mr. McCann pointed out, the problem knows no class.

"It's everybody, it's all of us," he said.

The Cohasset TIPS program for parents is slated for early November.

Health notes corrections

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing to correct some errors in the Health Notes which appeared in the Aug. 10 issue of the Mariner. I emailed you an early copy of a draft health notes which had not been approved by the full board. The final version contains corrections of errors in fact, and reductions in emphasis. In summary, the changes are as follows:

1. The original article did not note that the wet weather testing was done for the town by Camp Dresser & McKee in selected catch basins around Little Harbor. Catch basins by their nature may contain higher levels of pollution than open bodies of water. Although outfall from all the catchbasins sampled flows directly into Little Harbor, readings from that body of water could have considerably lower coliform numbers.

2. The article indicated that there are permissible levels of fecal coliform for drinking water. This is not true. Current standards do not exist for fecal coliform in drinking water. Any levels above zero are not acceptable.

3. Several active steps are being taken by the town to help solve the storm-water problem, and these were not mentioned in the article. They are:

- Better Catchbasin cleanout and maintenance
- Upgrading selected catchbasins
- Building vegetated swales to process storm water from particularly important sources of pollution.

I regret any misinterpretation which my error may cause, and any inconvenience this correction may cause.

Cohasset Village

Cohasset Revitalization Corporation
87 Elm Street

Attn: Dean Rizzo

Your recent visit to my office prompted me to write this letter to outline my feelings on the Village Revitalization Project.

To paraphrase a comment that you made, the germ of this idea was that the sidewalks in the village were in very poor shape, and if the sidewalks were to be replaced then the streets would have to be excavated to restore the curbstone height to its original level. If this excavation were to take place then it would make sense to relocate the utilities underground. Now there is some semblance of logic in this thought process, but some might think that the "Keep It Simple Stupid Principle" should be applied. If the sidewalks need to be replaced then replace the sidewalks, period.

It seems to me that once the KISS principle fell by the wayside that it was decided that other elements had to be examined: traffic patterns, decorative lighting, brick sidewalks, a sidewalk on South Main Street from the bus stop to the intersection of Elm Street and a concept of linking the village to the harbor.

Please allow me to make some comments.

As to the traffic pattern I am of the opinion that a one-way traffic pattern through the village is unworkable. Elm Street would have to be one way and Brook Street to be one way in the other direction. It would make sense that emergency vehicles, both fire and police vehicles, would require a one-way pattern into the village in order to assure prompt response to the North Main Street side of town. Therefore Brook Street would be one way from South Main Street to Elm Street. Picture the fire engines returning to the station and making a 90-degree left turn from South Main into Brook and then a 90-degree right turn from Brook into oncoming traffic on Elm. Also envision boat haulers making the same turns on their way to the harbor. How about the delivery trucks, many of which are tractor trailer rigs? How about all the traffic from the south side of town making a right turn on Brook and a left turn on Elm in order to get back to South Main to continue the journey through town? Doesn't seem very logical to me.

Strange as it might seem, Cohasset Village works pretty well even with angle parking, perhaps even because of angle parking I would tread very lightly about reducing the number of parking spaces, even by one space.

I don't grasp the concept of connecting the harbor and the village by making Elm Street more pedestrian friendly. For which pedestrians is this concept designed? Tourists? We are hardly a tourist mecca. I would suggest that any improvements be completely focused on town inhabitants on the premise that what will be good for the inhabitants will automatically be good for any visitors. Any visitors who can't find the harbor from the village will be sure to get adequate directions from people in the village businesses. If anyone asks me I will reply "Go East, Young Man/Woman."

The facet of the process which bothers me the most is the proposed sidewalk from the bus stop to Elm Street. When this project was first presented by the Revitalization Committee the presenter said that there were three things to be accomplished, the first of which was safety. I would submit that pedestrian safety on the stretch of South Main Street is an oxymoron for one very simple reason: the pedestrians are too close to traffic and there is no place to run. There is a very simple solution: put up two signs which say "For your protection please cross over to the other side of the street."

Perhaps the discussion of sidewalks leads to "stream of consciousness planning" as I described back at the start of this letter. The South Main sidewalk proposal led to blasting of the ledge below St. Stephen's Church putting a bench on the sidewalk for people to rest (with a view of the traffic passing by), the creation of a "buildout" (another peninsula) for the safety of pedestrians to cross Elm Street to the town pump section of the sidewalk at the hardware store. Again a violation of the KISS principle.

Underground utilities of course would be very nice but at what cost? I would guess that Cohasset residents would place many other projects above this on the list of things which should be completed.

Any planning for Cohasset Village should be directed by the concept of how any projects will benefit the residents and that the village is a simple organism and requires simple solutions.

The best improvements made in the village in the most recent years came at the hands of Anna Abbruzzese, Ann Whelan and Jackie Dormitzer. They were behind the Village Pump, the James Brook Walkway, the flower boxes lining South Main Street and the little park between Tedeschi's Market and French Memories. There were other people involved in these projects but these ladies were the guiding light. I like their approach which does seem to follow the KISS principle.

Thank you for the opportunity of expressing my views.

Parental reaction about teen drinking changed

20 years ago, parents wanted police to be tough

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The date was June 12, 1980 and the headline on page one of the Cohasset Mariner was about the problem of under-age drinking in town.

Sound familiar?

But there was an important difference. Twenty years ago, Cohasset parents went to the selectmen to call for teen arrests — they wanted their kids picked up for under-age drinking.

The headline read: "Parents say police too soft on kids" and the article went on to say the parents accused police of ignoring the problem of minors in possession of alcohol in town.

The old newspaper produced by Margo Aikens at the drug and alcohol committee last week prompted discussion among members about how times have changed.

Parental reaction to the 22 minors arrested last month at two parties ranged from anger to outrage in some cases.

"Some kind of change has gone on in the attitude of parents," said the Rev. Clifford Cutler of St. Stephen's Church, who is chairman of the committee.

Police officer Lisa Matos said some parents, who were called to the station to pick up their teenager, became disorderly and almost ended up in jail themselves.

But some good has come in the aftermath of the arrests, committee members said.

Jodi Butman said the arrests and subsequent publicity have sparked conversation at home between teens and their parents.

And Liz Bates said her daughter was with some friends who said "no" to an opportunity to drink because they didn't want to be arrested.

"I called Chief Noonan to say thank you," she said.

Matos said a father called after another incident to thank police for arresting his daughter because there were other drugs there. "He said if it had not been for the police arresting his daughter, who knows what might have happened to her." Matos said.

TIPS for parents event slated

The drug and alcohol committee plans to host TIPS for parents program from 7:30-9 p.m., Nov. 8 at The Garage.

TIPS, which stands for Training Intervention Procedure by Service, started in 1982 and includes seven different programs including one for parents.

The cost would be about $20 per person, including materials, according to Edward J. McCann Jr., a certified TIPS instructor who made a presentation on the program to the committee last week.

He explained that the program looks at the problem from the server's or social host's perspective and educates parents about the mixed messages they may be sending their children.

"We may preach to kids one message," he said. "But then they see you having a great time at a barbecue."

McCann said the alcohol problem knows no bounds or class.

"It's everybody, it's all of us," he said.

Committee says it's being snubbed by selectmen

Government Island group wants to be consulted

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Government Island Study Committee thinks it's being ignored by selectmen.

Committee members said Peter Roy's recent effort to make improvements to Government Island is just the latest example of snubs by the board.

"When an issue comes before selectmen that concerns Government Island, I think they should bring it before [the GISC] because that's what we're here for, and they don't," said committee chairman Ham Tewksbury at a committee meeting last week. "We're supposed to be an advisory committee."

The GISC's complaint is not just a byproduct of Roy's latest request, but instead something that has been building up. The committee said the creation of the Lightkeeper's Memorial on Government Island and the recent attempt to establish visitor parking spaces on the island are two more examples of times selectmen have either ignored the group's recommendations or ignored the committee altogether.

Government Island — which also includes is Lightkeepers' Residence and the templates used when the second Minot Light was being built — is one of the most historic areas in town and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Lightkeepers' Memorial consists of a granite stone set in a compass rose that was dedicated in May to the two lightkeepers killed when the first Minot Light toppled in a gale in 1851. The committee was against the idea of the memorial, saying it was too big for the location, and proposed a simple plaque on the existing Minot Light replica.

Earlier this summer, selectmen reserved two spaces on Government Island for use by visitors. At the request of various civic groups, the spots were moved three times by July, and then, when the GISC petitioned to have it moved a fourth time, the town abandoned the idea.

"[Selectmen] asked the harbor committee [about the signs]," said committee member Dick Barrow. "What do they got to do with it?"

"What is the power of this committee? What is the point of having it?" Tewksbury asked. "We would like to be consulted about anything on Government Island [that comes before selectmen]. We are an advisory committee."

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan said though the selectmen don't always ask the committee for its opinion, the board does see the need for having it.

"There is a need for the division of labor. We're all volunteers doing this work in addition to our full-time jobs. While most final decisions rest with the Board of Selectmen, there are times we don't have time to focus deeply on an issue, and that's where you set up a specialized committee," he said, such as the committee recently established to look into sites for a new police/fire station.

But Callahan said not every issue should require selectmen to seek out a committee's approval.

"My personal view is that I do think we have too many committees and we sometimes study things to death. We also have a town manager who has a great deal of authority and, who, by personality, is a take-charge kind of guy," he said referring to Mark Haddad. "I don't think we purposely try to avoid some committee…If they have an opinion, they should feel free and volunteer it without waiting for the formality that we have to ask them."

Tewksbury said that attempts to establish communication with selectmen has "fallen on deaf ears." He pointed to a recent meeting between himself, committee member Bob Davenport of Black Horse Lane and Haddad, where Haddad told them the harbormaster's shack would be painted white, instead of its present yellow color because "he likes white."

Haddad said he is in favor of repainting the structure white but said the paint has not yet been purchased. "At the last selectmen's meeting they left it up to me to decide what to do there."

On Wednesday, Haddad said he had discussed the issue with Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters and said the shack will be painted white.

Haddad also pointed out the committee was consulted about a recent proposal to allow lobster wholesalers to temporarily park on the Government Island pier and buy lobsters.

"I know the GISC made their opinions well-known [on the Lightkeepers Memorial] and what happened is the Board of Selectmen disagreed, which is their prerogative," said Callahan. "With respect to Mr. Roy, we have put his request on hold under advisement. If the GISC wants to comment on it, we welcome it."

On July 25, Roy sent a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad offering to "provide additional sprucing up to the town areas surrounding the harbor." The improvements included new grass on Government Island, as well as edging the existing grass, repairing and repainting the islands existing green benches, and to repaint the exterior of the harbormaster's shack and add window boxes and hanging baskets. The proposal came weeks after Roy, a wealthy businessman who owns the harbor-front properties Kimballs and Atlantica, repainted a number of town properties including the Margin Street pier, the sea wall by Kimball's, and the Lawrence Street pergola — all with the selectmen's permission. However some residents criticized the gesture after the town property was painted black and gray —what some people perceived as "Roy's corporate colors." Selectmen admitted they "goofed" by not specifying what colors Roy could paint the town property. Part of the pergola was repainted white, at Haddad's request.

Committee member Peter Whitman expressed concerned that Roy is being allowed to do as he pleases with the waterfront, and said some group in town has to put a foot down. "There is a very strong feeling in town that Peter Roy owns Cohasset Harbor…Someone needs to put a finger up and say, who does this belong to?"

Whitman said he has no problem with Roy offering to paint town property, but does have a problem with the Margin Street resident changing the property's color. "If Peter Roy wants to change the color of a wharf, he has to go to the town for approval."

But Tewksbury was doubtful that requiring town approval would be an effective barrier. "[Selectmen] said they will watch over it more carefully, but they are so enamored with him. No matter what he brings before them they'd just say yes."

The group said Roy's proposed improvements are unnecessary. According to the committee, the grassed area has just been "re-sodded," and part of it is used for winter storage of sailing club boats. Members also said the harbormaster's shack is fine and doesn't need to be repainted.

Government Island has long history of service

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Government Island has been a public land since the mid 1850's, when the federal government purchased the peninsula from Cohasset resident James Doane. The U.S. Lighthouse Establishment thought the seven-acre parcel of land was ideal for running the support operation of the new Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

After many shipwrecks at the hands of the much-feared Cohasset rocks off the Cohasset coast, the Lighthouse Establishment built a wooden, spider-legged lighthouse on Outer Minot's Ledge in early 1850. But a bad storm in April, 1851 toppled the lighthouse, killing two lightkeepers, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson.

As a result, the government commissioned a new lighthouse that would be able to withstand harsh Atlantic storms. In 1855 construction began at the ledge on the new 114-foot high structure made from Quincy granite.

Contractors used Government Island, known officially as Shore Station Reservation, as a staging area for the project, and even practiced building the structure on templates on the shore. The lighthouse was completed in 1860 and still stands today.

Shore Station Reservation had two lightkeepers residences. The one on top an embankment remains. It was recently renovated, renamed the Lightkeeper's Residence and is leased to the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation. Another residence was located in the vicinity of where the harbormaster's shed stands today. According to town archivist David Wadsworth, it was razed in 1970. Other buildings constructed on the island for use by the lightkeepers include the smaller building next to the remaining house (originally the Engineering Office), a brick oil/kerosene storage building (now being used by the Cohasset Sailing Club), and a boathouse (now located at the adjacent Hagerty property).

George Fitzpatrick was the light's last keeper, before Minot's Light became automated in 1947. The Lighthouse Establishment, now called the U.S. Lighthouse Service, and the War Assets Administration, declared the property "surplus land" and sold it to the town.

Included with the land was the property's highpoint, known as Beacon Rock. The ledge received its moniker because the ledge's summit is the former location of the semaphore signaling device, used by the mainland to communicate with the lighthouse two and a half miles out to sea.

In the 1960's, the town and the Cohasset Historical Society worked together to restore the 100-year-old templates used to craft the lighthouse base. A low, granite wall built from leftover granite pieces was built half-surrounding it.

Wadsworth said in 1987 the 42 blocks making up the light's "watch room" were replaced. The old blocks were removed from the site, reconstructed on Government Island, and topped with a replica of the lantern house, complete with copper roof. The blocks were reassembled by Harold Litchfield, currently the town's Superintendant of the Department of Public Works with lobsterman Herb Jason doing the top, said Wadsworth. "It's pretty close [to the original]," he said.

In 1994, the Shore Station for Minot's Ledge Lighthouse – Government Island's name as it appears on assessors maps – was placed on the National Register of Historic Places. It already had been declared a National Civil Engineering Landmark a few years before.

The Government Island Study Committee was formed in 1967 in order to advise selectmen on the island's use and activities.

Material from the Cohasset Historical Society was used for background information in this article.

Electronic invasion

One of the most pleasurable vacations I ever enjoyed was two August weeks in a cottage on the beach at Fire Island — no, not that section — an oasis of seclusion less than 50 miles from the largest city on the eastern seaboard.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Anyone who wished to get in touch with me during that time had to call the police station in Patchogue, Long Island, where a call would be placed across the bay to the Davis Park substation where a message would be dispatched to me by runner.

If I chose to call back — and I emphasize the "if" — my only choice would be the pay phone on the public dock, the lifeline I used to call across the bay to the store in Patchogue to place a food order that would be sent to me on the next ferry.

If you get the idea that the cottage on Fire Island was as cut off from the feverish hustle and bright lights of the real world as Gervase and Sean and the rest of the cast of "Survivor" on Palau Tiga, you're right on.

And that, to me, at least, is the way a vacation is supposed to be.

That's why the other day while sunning my bod on the beach at Humarock, listening to the pleasurably muted roar of surf and the squawking of gulls, I was mildly surprised and not a little peeved to hear a telephone ring. And then another, and another.

Cell phones were erupting all around me as the "real" world reached out electronic tentacles to destroy whatever was left of my precious seclusion.

I tell you cell phones are going to be the curse of the 21st century.

There'll soon be 100 million of them and they're going to do to us admirers of peace and quiet what binoculars did to nudist camps and sonar did to Hitler's U-boat fleet.

Cell phones were erupting all around me as the "real" world reached out electronic tentacles to destroy whatever was left of my precious seclusion.

It's getting so that you can't enjoy a Shannon Tweed movie at the local Bijou without a cell phone going off in the next seat or savor a plate of fried calamari at your favorite trattoria without a loud phone discussion at the next table.

Already I'm contemplating membership in the Campaign to Rid America of Cellular Phones Over Time (CRACPOT), an organization founded by author Don Campbell shortly after his wife tried to call her office from 8,000 feet up in the wilderness of Arizona's White Mountains just to see if her phone worked.

Right now cell phones are being attacked from two sides, public health and public safety.

A whole school of scientific thought maintains that radiation from cell phones can affect the brain of the user and the National Cancer Institute is conducting a study to see whether the radiation can really cause brain cancer.

The health dangers of cell phone radiation apparently started when researchers at the University of Washington discovered that rats exposed to similar radiation were less likely to find their ways through a water maze than rats which were not exposed.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has issued a warning to drivers that use of a cell phone while their car is in motion can be distraction enough the make them miss seeing that child chasing a lost ball or that 18-wheeler that is bearing down on him.

"Driver distraction in all its forms and from all its sources is a real threat to the safety of America's roads," said Rosalyn Millman, deputy administrator of the NHTSA, noting that that includes fax machines, e-mail systems and entertainment centers as well as cell phones.

But none of those things handles my beef with cell phones — the electronic invasion of my private world by outside forces comparable to second hand smoke.

Perhaps the answer can be found in the city of Campinas in Brazil, where they have just passed legislation requiring theaters, restaurants, libraries or classrooms to post signs notifying cell phone users they may be thrown out bodily if their instruments go off.

But not in a mean-spirited way.

"People who can't manage to switch off from the world for just two hours deserve our pity," said Luis Yabiku, who sponsored the legislation.

CANDIDATES CORNER

MA NOW endorses Holden

The Massachusetts Chapter of the National Organization for Women Political Action Committee announced its endorsement of Michael Holden. Holden was on the board of selectmen from 1997 through the beginning of this year, serving as chair for the 1999-2000 term. Holden also served on the Hingham Board of Health from 1995 through 1997.

"Michael Holden will be an outstanding leader for women's rights in the legislature. He is a very strong candidate on the issues that women care about, and we know he is committed to the people of his district," said Andi Mullin, chair of the MA NOW PAC. "He is dedicated to women, children, and working families, and we are very excited about working with him in the Statehouse."

MA NOW is a multi-issue, volunteer run, feminist organization that works to maintain and expand reproductive rights, civil rights, economic justice, and other policies that advance women's equality. In the past, MA NOW has endorsed many progressive candidates, both men and women, who have worked to enhance women's rights.

AFL-CIO endorses Bradley

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley recently received the endorsement of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO.

Through a combination of questionnaires and interviews, in conjunction with Bradley's record of professional and community service, the AFL-CIO determined Garrett Bradley to be the best candidate to serve as state representative in the 3rd Plymouth District. "…You have demonstrated your commitment to working families of the Commonwealth and by extension, your commitment to organized labor," stated Robert Haynes, President of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO.

"I am honored to receive the endorsement of the AFL-CIO," said Bradley, "and I am proud of the work the AFL-CIO has done for working families in this district. If elected, I will advocate for the rights of working men and women, and make sure that their voice is heard on Beacon Hill."

Bradley has already received endorsements from numerous organizations. He continues to actively campaign throughout the district by going to door-to-door to speak with voters directly.

McKenna fundraiser

The Citizens for Mary Anne McKenna campaign committee will host a fundraiser at the American Legion Hall in Cohasset Thursday, Aug. 24 , from 7 - 9 p.m. A barbecue dinner will be catered by Clyde's Roadhouse Saloon. All are welcome to come and share in the enthusiasm and momentum of this campaign. For further information, call Billy Ramsey at 749-2532, Kay Mahoney at 925-1084, or Dave Farrag at 383-9519.

TRIAD program takes off

liked the idea because of her previous experience with the program while working with the Braintree Council on Aging, and because 23 percent of Cohasset's population is over 60 years old – one of the highest percentages on the South Shore.

"This is a very small but private town," she said. "There is not a lot of access to the town or opportunity to get out of the house, or get downtown."

The program addresses such issues as seniors being home alone, providing transportation for medical appointments and shopping, and ensuring seniors' physical and financial safety.

TRIAD recently introduced the "R.U.OK." program in Braintree, which has an automated system call seniors every day. If a senior fails to answer the phone, it calls back later in the day. If the senior still doesn't respond, police are notified and check to see if the senior is "OK."

The program also sponsors seminars to alert seniors of any potential money scams that target seniors. It also discusses local issues such as the influx in wild animal sightings in town, and what seniors should do if one approaches their house.

A survey was recently distributed in the Council on Elder Affairs newsletter, looking to identify what seniors' safety concerns are, what type of programs seniors are interested in learning more about. Results are expected to be discussed at the group's next meeting on Aug. 23 at 9:30 a.m. at the town's senior housing complex on Elm Street.

"We want to encourage people to come to these meetings and discuss what issues are important to them," said Bryanton.

The Cohasset TRIAD plans on working in conjunction with the town's Council on Elder Affairs, providing services such as rides to shopping centers, the bank, and medical appointments, as well as giving families of seniors a way to make sure their loved ones are safe.

Bryanton understands how some people may be resistant to coming to the TRIAD looking for assistance, or taking advantage of the educational programs the program has to offer. "Sometimes in a large city it's easier to ask for help," she said. "But in a small town, this is the town they raised their children in."

She hopes seniors realize it's normal to need some help as they grow older.

The Cohasset TRIAD is run by a Seniors and Law Enforcement Together (S.A.L.T) advisory council. Its bylaws require at least 12 people be on the council. Included are Cohasset fire chief Roger Lincoln, police chief Brian Noonan, Chris Bell from the sheriff's department, social services liaison Judy Fitzsimmons and outreach worker Carol Barrett. Joseph Buckley was voted chairman of the council in recent elections, with John Coe and Betty Brooke serving as vice-chairmen, Barrett as secretary, and Maria Perroncello as treasurer.

"We just hit the ground running more or less, but what we're trying to do is establish linkage between the sheriff's office, police department, fire department and elder affairs, to find out what needs are in Cohasset," said Buckley. He pointed out some examples of ideas floated by the council including a light that a senior in trouble can turn on and cause an outside light to blink, or have numbers on houses stand out better. "I've been working with seniors for 12 years now and bringing the fire and police into it, getting some younger blood and ideas – I'm really kind of thrilled with it."

The Cohassset TRIAD is scheduled to meet on the last Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. On Sept. 9 the group, in conjunction with the sheriff's office, will sponsor a health and wellness day on Cohasset Common, Constitution Park and Depot Court from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Other towns involved with the TRIAD program include Braintree, Millis, Norfolk, Franklin, Medway, Avon, Bellingham, Westwood, Dover, Needham, Wrentham, Foxboro, Stoughton and Weymouth.

Seniors can contact the Council on Elder Affairs at either 383-9112 or 383-9116.

School funding picture comes into focus cial town meeting in December to approve a $200,000 transfer from free cash. The remaining $180,000 was made up by another free cash transfer at the March Town Meeting.

Haddad said he brought the under-funding idea to then school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo – now committee treasurer – and superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, who gave Haddad their support. He said they agreed it would be better to not fully fund the budget in March, when they wouldn't know the final cost needs would be until September.

He said once final school registration numbers are in, with the final cost requirements for special education programs, he will sit down with Malvey and new school committee chairman Pat Martin, "put a final number" on the budget, bring it to town meeting and be able to set a final tax rate. "It just seems to make more sense [this way]," Haddad said. "By the time October 23 comes around [the preliminary date set for the Fall town meeting], we will know enrollment, we will know what the special education impact will be, we will have hired some teachers and will know the payroll needs....This is a much more intelligent way to budget."

Though Martin has not yet seen the final budget numbers, she is pleased with the initial reports.

Malvey was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Town Meeting approved a "level-funded" $9,251,555 FY01 budget in the March Town Meeting. That amount was derived from covering all contractual obligations and all debt service. Cohasset received $1,327,934 from the state for education funding last month.

New row team looks to old ways

Cohasset students get new hobby/history lesson

By Allison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High students are going down to the sea, but you won't find them with sails unfurled.

These kids are getting their feet wet in something that's very old and very new: competitive open water rowing. It will come as no surprise to the old-timers around town. Cohasset and lifesaving boats go together like the common pond and ducks.

"The town of Cohasset had the first official lifesaving station," says organizer Jack Buckley. "We want to build upon that idea, restore the traditional wooden lifesaving boats and teach the crew how to row a traditional pulling boat."

"The town of Cohasset had the first official lifesaving station. We want to build upon that idea, restore the traditional wooden lifesaving boats and teach the crew how to row a traditional pulling boat."

The boats the Cohasset crew team will use look nothing like the familiar narrow, light-weight shells swooping down the Charles River; these boats are fashioned after the lifesaving boats used by the precursor to the Coast Guard.

Lifesaving boats, like the smaller, one-man dory used by Irish mossers and fishermen, are built for stability on the open seas. They are broad in the beam and designed to resist the buffets of ocean waves. While they would look clunky and out of place at the Head of the Charles Regatta, regatta shells are designed for the serene water of inland rivers. They wouldn't stand a chance on the shifting waves off Cohasset.

Lifesaving boats also have fixed seats, unlike the sliding seats used in most competitive rowing boats used in college and Olympic programs. The fixed seat requires the rowers to use more upper body strength to propel the boat.

If history, sentiment and the nature of the ocean are behind the broad-beamed boats of the fledgling rowing program, Buckley is also eminently practical.

"We are using a hybrid for racing," he says. The racing boats they will use sit low in the water, as do shells, but have the wide and slightly rounded beam of the lifesaving boats. They are also equipped with sliding seats to provide crew members with the flexibility of staying with open water rowing or joining the river-based racing programs most common at the college level.

"It's a good boat for introducing kids to the sport of rowing," explains Buckley. "This is sort of the best of both worlds."

The hybrid boats might also have something to do with the fact that Cohasset Maritime Institute's lifesaving boats aren't seaworthy at this time.

"Our two lifeboats need a lot of work," Buckley says. "The John Warren II is in dry-dock in Hull. We need to raise money to repair it."

Students in Cohasset High's boat-building class are building the other lifesaving boat, as yet unnamed.

Open water rowing is still in its infancy on the South Shore, but it's coming on strong. The closest competitors Buckley knows of are Hull, of course, and a Duxbury crew team that rows out of Plymouth.

"There are various youth races, primarily sponsored by the Hull Lifesaving Museum," Buckley says. "In November, Hull hosts a championship that draws crews from all over New England. Last year there were probably 150-200 kids from as far away as Deer Isle, Maine all the way down to Manhattan."

Buckley already has the nucleus of his team, but he's hoping to draw more members.

"There are probably only six to seven kids who row out of Cohasset on Monday and Thursday nights," he said on a recent drizzly evening. "There are five here tonight."

Buckley's team is a co-ed effort. The heart of the Cohasset team is senior Bea Rankin.

"Bea is the most experienced," Buckley said. "She's been rowing several years at the Hull Lifesaving Station and out of Boston."

Buckley sings Rankin's praises.

"She's a natural leader," he says. "She leads by example and she's very enthusiastic."

Bea isn't the only woman on the team. Fellow senior Amy Devlin also keeps pace at the oars. The other rowers

Cohasset takes third in swim meet

A good showing in a 'down year'

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

When you consider how the age brackets work at these swim meets, Cohasset's amazing feat of eight league championships in 10 years takes on an even greater degree of wonderment. With swimmers moving up in category every two years, rather than one, you'd figure the law of averages would have to catch up to them eventually.

Well, that's exactly what happened this past Saturday, as the Cohasset swim team—with many nine-year olds competing with 10-year olds, 11's against 12's and 13's versus 14's— finished third in the eight team field that assembled for the annual South Shore Swim League Championships at Wheaton College in Norton.

"A lot of our stronger swimmers from last year advanced, so we weren't quite as solid overall as we were last year " reported Allison Hughes, Cohasset's fifth year swim coach. "We also had a lot of really close races and the score sheet doesn't reflect.

"Still, I thought we had some great performances this year."

One such performance was turned in by Brendan Doonan. The eight-year old picked up a remarkable four first place finishes. Individually, he took the top prize in the 25 yard backstroke with a time of 21.96 and the 25 yard butterfly (20.00). As a member of the 8 & under relay team (along with Jack Carrier, Ian Porter and Graham Stevenson), he contributed to wins in the 100 yard medley relay (1:25.57) and the 100 yard freestyle relay (1:13.03). This latter time was a new meet record.

The 10 & Under Cohasset boys of Patrick Doonan, Cliff Musto, Alexander Hunt and Cameron Cunningham also set a new standard of excellence for the meet with a time of 1:12.91 in the 100 yard Medley Relay.

Maich played with South Shore Seadogs for national crown

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's Will Maich is one of a handful of local teenagers who has been deemed talented enough not only to be selected for the South Shore Baseball Club, but also to travel with the elite team to compete for the national championship in the 13 and under AAU division.

The South Shore Seadogs sent all six of their eligible age group teams, 11-16, to the nationals this summer.

Maich was used in all three outfield positions this year, but blossomed into a terrific right fielder.

"Plays that anyone else would have trouble with, Will makes it look routine," assessed Coach Chris Duffy.

Maich also led the Seadogs in runs scored this season, utilizing both speed and instincts.

"He is a great base runner," said Duffy. "We would put him to run for our catcher... and I don't think he would have scored half as many runs as Will did."

Maich played for the Cardinals as a Cohasset Little Leaguer, and led them to the championships in his final year, 1998.

Since AAU clubs are the "All-Star team of All-Star teams," as 16 and under coach Rick Delvecchio called them, playing time can be hard to come by.

"He is a real team player," said Coach Duffy, who has gone all over New England to find talent for the Seadogs. "If someone makes a bad play or something, Will is the first one in the dugout to give him a high five."

"It is a very competitive team," said Maich. "There are tons of great players from all over the state, and you have to work for everything you get."

Maich, a student athlete at Derby Academy, was one over 40 of the top players trying out for the Seadogs, though only 16 made the cut.

In this, his first year with the Seadogs, Maich has come a long way not only with his skills on the field, but adjusting to a team that had been playing together for several seasons.

"Coming into this season, we had a nucleus of eight to ten kids that played with us last year," said Duffy. "Will has done as good a job as any at fitting in."

After recording a 31-20 record in AAU games this year, including 13-5 in state tournaments, the Seadogs won the Massachusetts AAU silver medal.

Despite losing four of their six games in the national tournament, the Seadogs played quite well against the top teams in the country.

In the first game of the tournament, the Seadogs came out fired up and beat the River City Rhinos of Jacksonville, Fl, the team that ended up winning the national title.

The Seadogs lost one of the next two games to fall to 2-1 for the tournament, tying them with two others in their bracket. The tiebreaker to decide which two teams would advance to the medal round was the amount of runs allowed through the first three games. The Seadogs allowed 15 runs, one more than the New Jersey Thunder, and two more than the Rhinos.

"Telling the team we didn't make the medal round by one run really took the wind out of their sails," said Duffy. The Seadogs went on to lose their last three games in the consolation bracket.

Disappointing as it was to come away without a high finish, the Seadogs clearly had a terrific experience competing in the high pressure and even higher fun atmosphere.

Said Duffy, "It was very nerve-racking (for the players), but it was the chance of a lifetime. This was my seventh tournament, and I remember each one like it was yesterday."

Seadogs impress at nationals

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The South Shore Baseball 16 and under junior Olympics Seadogs team competed against six of the best teams in the nation in the Super Seven World Series in Atlanta, Ga. last week.

The Seadogs started off the tournament with a tough loss last Thursday to Team Florida, who wound up the silver medal winners for the tournament.

Going from the frying pan to the fire, the Seadogs slugged it out later that day with the six-time defending tournament champion East Cobb Astros, who went on to make it seven straight. The local lads nearly pulled off a shocker, as they loaded the bases in the final inning with no outs and trailing by just two runs, 6-4. Unfortunately, that threat fizzled and this wound up being the final score.

What was particularly impressive about the Seadogs showing in this game was the fact that they were forced to go against top college prospect Kyle Davies, whose fastball was topping out in the low 90s.

"The exposure to colleges was amazing," said assistant coach Kerry Cole, father of Seadogs right-hander Jessie Cole of Scituate. "There were so many division one and division two coaches, all with radar guns."

After the two opening losses, the Seadogs refused to go quietly, winning their next three over the Bayside Yankees form New York, the Orange County Dawgs of California, and the Maryland Orioles.

Cole, also a .400 hitter for the season, was used as a reliever and recorded a save in the victory over Orange County. The Scituate native also played near flawless defense as a second and third baseman for most of the tournament.

The other local player, Brendan Byrne of Cohasset, provided excellent production atop the batting order.

"Brendan had a very good tournament," said Coach Cole. "He did his job in the lead off spot; he got a lot of hits, and got on base a lot."

Outfielder Jason Houser, a resident of East Bridgewater and a student-athlete at Cardinal Spellman, was the only member of the Seadogs named to the All-Tournament team, this in recognition of his error free play in left field and a solid all around performance at the plate.

The sub-par 3-4 record was not really indicative of the team's showing in the elite tourney, considering the nip and tuck losses to the eventual champions, the East Cobb Astros, and runner up Team Florida.

"We came just hoping to keep games close," said Kerry Cole. "But with a little luck, we could have been 5-2."

The Seadogs finished sixth, losing to the Bayside Yankees in the playoff round on Sunday. Despite the disappointing finish, the Seadogs have already been invited to next year's Super Seven World Series.

At this high level of play, winning is obviously very important. Fortunately, the local boys didn't let the tough breaks make them lose sight of the importance of good sportsmanship.

Said Kerry Cole, "I was really impressed with the way (this team) conducted themselves: as gentlemen with a lot of class."

New row team looks to old ways

working out in Monday's foggy drizzle included juniors Matt O'Grodnik, Mark Lehman and Charlie Anderson.

"I'm hoping we'll have eight to 10 members," Buckley says. "Ten would be ideal."

Buckley knows he's competing against a lot of other sports and activities. Many of the students who have expressed an interest in rowing don't have the time to commit to another team. If that's the bad news, it also bodes well for the future of open water rowing. Buckley is willing to be as accommodating as it takes.

"If we can build a successful fall season and keep them active through the winter, perhaps in the spring and summer we can introduce recreational and learn-to-row programs."

For more information about the Cohasset Maritime Institute open water rowing team, call Jack Buckley at 383-8261.

SPORTS NOTES

Fall sports physical examinations/user's fee

A physical exam is required for all students planning to play any fall sport at Cohasset Middle-High School.

Dr. Steven Golden will be in the health room at the middle-high school for all boys soccer, girls soccer, field hockey and football players in grades 9 to 12 on Thursday, Aug. 24, at 4 p.m. Please note this will be the only time physicals will be offered by the school before practice begins on Monday, Aug. 28.

If you are unable to take advantage of the physical at this time, you will need to be examined by your family physician. The physician's report must be presented to the school nurse, stating the student is in good physical condition to participate in the sport. If there is going to be a problem making the school physical time, call Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 to make other arrangements.

Student athletes are also reminded that they must bring their $75 sports user's fee to the first practice. If there are questions or problems, again, please call Ron Ford.

No student will be allowed to begin practice until he/she has had a physical examination and paid $75 user's fee or made other arrangements.

Cohasset tri-athlete shines

Congratulations to Cohasset resident Rod Simms for his 32nd place finish in the Massachusetts triathlon on Aug. 6 in Sharon. The 45 year old finished with a combined time of 1:18:07 in the half mile swim (13:08), 12.5 mile bike ride (34:59) and 4.4 mile run (30:00). In addition to notching the 32nd best time in a field of 636, this finish was also good for third out of 34 in the men's 45-49 division.

Crew Team Begins Practice

Cohasset Maritime Institute is pleased to announce that it will be sponsoring a high school crew team to compete in the open water rowing races held this Fall throughout New England. Students interested in participating in this sport should contact Jack Buckley at 383-8261. Practice will start the week of August 14.

Cohasset Youth Soccer raffle

The Cohasset Youth Soccer League is sponsoring a raffle to raise funds for the fall 2000 and Spring 2001 town soccer programs. The club is raffling a classic 1966 Ford Mustang Convertible. Tickets are $5.00 each or 3 for $10.00.

Winners will be announced on Tuesday, September 5, 2000, outside Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Street. The winner need not be present to win. Maximum number of tickets available for sale is eight thousand (8,000).

To request tickets, get facts about the car and see a color photograph, visit www.mustangraffle.cjb.net. Or call 781-383-7017. You must be 18 years of age to participate.

Sailing club junior racing results

In spite of weather conditions that have forced the cancellation of many of the junior races this summer, the Cohasset Sailing Club racing program has had a busy season. New Racing Coach, Pat Rynne, has set up the foundation of a new race training program that promises to raise the quality of instruction and competitiveness of the junior sailors over the next several years. The racing fleet of Club 420's increased from two to three boats with the generous donation by Debbie and Tom Cook of the fast, blue boat that was raced successfully in the past by their daughter Whitney.

Scituate Junior Regatta

In the first regatta of the year, the team of Owen McDonald and. Justin Runey faced very tough competition in two days of racing in Scituate harbor. In conditions ranging from high winds and big swells to very light air, the pair sailed well against crews with much more experience in racing Club 210's. In spite of surprising many of the other boats with their successful starting tactics, the CSC boat finished at the back of a large and talented fleet.

Finlay Cup

Last month the MassBay Triple-Handed Regatta for the Finlay Cup was contested at the Hull Yacht Club. Racing in Rhodes 19's against teams from Cohasset Yacht Club, Hull Yacht Club, Hingham Yacht Club, and Boston Community Sailing, the crew of Owen McDonald, Justin Runey, and Caroline Henderson sailed competitively with finishes of second, third, and two fourth places finishes in the one-day event. Watching as the CSC crew ended with a fourth place overall were Coach Pat Rynne and the backup crew of Kelly Hurley, Peter Burnstein, and Jenny Daily.

Wasser Cup

In the summer long Wasser Cup racing series, sailors in the captain and sailing master classes have raced every Wednesday afternoon to practice their competitive skills. The races have all been close and well sailed with many teams still with a chance to win the cup this summer. In racing through last week, the results are: first, Kelly Hurley and Peter Bunstein; second, Ben Libby, Tom Ross, and Colin Reagan, third, Caroline Henderson, Carrie Muir, Caitlin Sanchez, and Marissa Evans, fourth, Emilie Shea, Christy Muir, Jackie Flint and Cassie Rossano; fifth, John DeWaal and Adam Chang, sixth - tied between the team of B.J. Buckley, and Toby and Tristam Norman, and the team of Michelle LeMaire, Kate DeWaal, and Courtney Hurley; eighth, Jenny Daley and Johanna Hamilton.

Stanton Series

In the family racing just-for-fun competition held on Sunday evenings at 5 p.m., the weather has been the winner in canceling all but two races. Everyone is invited to come out this Sunday, Aug. 20, to sail the final races of the season. The current leaders are the father and son team of Bob and Evan Deutch, followed closely by Nathan Porter and his grandfather Roger Porter. In third and forth places are the Cunningham and Martone families.

Coby's Run set for Aug. 27 in Scituate

The fifth annual Coby's Run is scheduled for Sunday, August 27.

The race is named in honor of Coby Cutler, a Scituate resident who had signed up for the Marines but was struck and killed by lightning.

"Coby was a runner," said his father, Rick. "He was big into physical fitness. He was a real gym rat."

All proceeds go to a fitness center at Scituate High School in Coby's name. There is a 10k race, a 5k race, a 5k walk and a "Fun Race", with awards going to the top three finishers in each division in the 10k and 5k races.

Courses start at the Gates School in Scituate Center and follow along the scenic Scituate coastline.

"It's a beautiful course," said Rick. "Runners like it because they go by lighthouse point, and because there's a hill at the very end, and it's a real killer."

In its fifth year, things are going smoothly for the race now.

"The first couple of years, it was a real nightmare," said Rick. "We didn't know what we were doing in terms of getting sponsors and volunteers. Now, we know how it works."

The events two major sponsors are Saab Automobiles and Horizon Wireless. Belmont Springs donates all water for the event.

There will also be a raffle for TVs, VCRs and round trip tickets.

The Marine Corps also sends down a troop to run the race in formation.

The race has grown the first four years, and hopes to continue this year.

"We had about 700 people last year," said Rick. "This year we're hoping for 800-900."

Registration is $10 by Aug. 6, $12 after that date up to the race. T-shirts will be given to the first 300 pre-registered entries. For more information, call (781) 545-7116. Fax (781) 544-6086.

Administration however, recently denied that the South Shore is being targeted.

According to Silva, sensitivity to the environment is the first priority.

Ironically, Hingham resident Albert Engelhart thinks that's one of the reasons to stop the project.

"If the runway is built, the South Shore will get by far the largest environmental impact of any Boston-area location," he said.

Noise is another key issue.

A number of children and adults are being awakened in the middle of the night in some parts of Hingham and Cohasset.

Oddleifson, a concerned Cohasset resident, said he was awakened by jet noise at 2:15 a.m. Tuesday from a flight over his house. There were four more in the next hour.

The Hingham task force has what it thinks is a solution. Have the planes come in from the east over the mouth of the harbor a mile north of Hull, crossing over Boston Lighthouse.

But, Timmerman said, pilots have refused this route in the past because they felt it was difficult to line up on the runway, thus posing a safety concern.

The new runway, if it becomes a reality, is expected to direct 75,000 more flights annually over Boston Harbor, which would affect area towns, according to Hingham task force members.

Hingham's April town meeting supported a warrant article asking selectmen to do everything in their power to protect Hingham from noise and other impacts of jet air traffic to and from Logan Airport.

MassPort's recent application to the Federal Aviation Administration for clearance to build the new runway resulted in an FAA request for more study.

As a result, a blue ribbon study panel was appointed — half by Gov. Paul Cellucci, a proponent of 14/32, and half by Mayor Menino, who opposes the runway — to study the effects of the proposed runway but not one member comes from any of the South Shore communities.

The Hingham task force is concentrating its efforts not only on existing air traffic, but on stopping the new runway because the group feels it would focus an enormous amount of additional traffic on the South Shore area. The task force would also like to get non-passenger traffic out of Logan as well.

First and foremost is the goal to help raise awareness about the consequences of 14/32 on the entire South Shore.

"It's up to the press to alert poor citizens that they are about to be had," Oddleifson said. "Cellucci is the bad guy." He said jet noise is starting to affect property values in Hingham and Cohasset.

MassPort has a special line on which residents can record noise complaints (617-567-3333) 24-hours a day. Those calling should give their name and address so each concern is recorded. Callers will receive a copy of the complaint.

State representative Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, have voiced strong opposition to the additional runway. The formation of a South Shore Jet Noise task force is currently in the works.

C.A.R.E. (Communities Against Runway Expansion) fears the new Boston Harbor Islands National Recreation Area will also be adversely impacted by the new runway. The group is concerned that all-night noise, fuel dumping and incessant low "overflights" would be the park's "permanent fate" if 14/32 is built.

According to Timmerman, fuel dumping ordinarily occurs over the water only under emergency conditions in order to minimize the risk of fire and to lessen the weight of the aircraft.

Cohasset wants Arrowood septic systems moved back expressed interest in coming up with some of the funds. The state won't commit until it finds out what the towns would do, McNabb said.

But Town Meetings are months away and the developers — who have the necessary approvals in hand — are moving forward.

"The pieces may all be in place to buy but the timeframe to do that is gone," McNabb said.

But the developers say there is nothing to fear from the septic systems they've installed.

"We meet all the rules and regulations," said Stephen Bjorkland, who is building the subdivision with Mark Winchester. "To try and penalize us at this point is kind of a slap in the face."

State rules for installing septic systems changed in 1995, after the Arrowood builders got approvals, McNabb said. Under the old rules, septic systems had to be 100 feet — not the 400 feet required today — from a water supply.

But Bjorkland said he and Winchester would have put the septic systems in another location, if they could. The closest is about 215 feet away from the reservoir, he said.

"Moving them is not an option," Bjorkland said. "There is no place else they can go." He explained that the best material for leaching purposes is where the systems are installed.

Prices for the custom-designed homes in the upscale subdivision will start at about $750,000, Bjorkland said. The 17 homes will be built on 70 acres.

"Any town would love to see a development like that," he said.

On the legal front, McNabb sees two opportunities. In interpreting the law, he is not sure that all septic systems would be "grandfathered" for a project if approvals were obtained prior to the change in Title V, the state environmental code governing septic systems. Also, the developers don't have clear title to one lot where state has 1/3 interest — a fact that could throw a wrench into the developer's plans, McNabb said.

But Bjorkland said that is a non-issue because money would be set-aside in an escrow account to pay the state if needed.

"If the state proves it does have an interest then we may have to set aside some money for them and that will be done," he said.

The reservoir that was constructed in the 1960s when the river was dammed is used to fill Lily Pond, the town's water supply.

McNabb has no confidence that down the road, the septic systems near the reservoir will be maintained.

"It's a bomb waiting to go off, the way I look at it," he said.

But Bjorkland said distance from the reservoir should not be an issue.

"The trick is getting the systems in right and we did that," he said.

Eminent domain bylaw stalled

Water commission chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said the town will continue to push for legislative approval of a new by-law approved by town meeting that would allow the town to take land outside its borders by eminent domain to protect its water supply. The legislature did not get to the bill before the end of the session July 31.

Although it's too late for Arrowood Estates (see related story), McNabb said the special legislation is still important.

"We still want to get it passed," he said. "Sixty percent of our watershed is outside Cohasset."

Fridays mean art

Fridays are art days at the museum this summer, July, August and September, 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. Meet at the museum, bring snacks, beverages, a hat, and your own supplies. All are welcome to join the informal, leaderless-but-inspired group throughout the summer, sharing our love of art. We will pick a different locale each week - museum, sea wall, Windmill Point, Spinnaker Island, or any secret places the group chooses to explore. Let there be no regrets come September that you should have painted more. Call Bonnie Guild, (781) 925-5433.

OBITUARIES

Harry E. Barber

Harry E. Barber, 97, formerly of Pocasset, Dedham, and Boston, died in his sleep July 24, in Westborough. A direct descendant of George Soule, Mayflower Compact, through his father, he was born in Boston.

He was a graduate of Mechanics Arts High School and Wentworth Institute.

Mr. Barber was active in Masonry beginning with membership in the West Roxbury Lodge A.F. & A.M in 1927. He served there as Master (1944-1945) and later affiliated with the DeWitt Clinton Lodge in Sandwich. He was also a member and past High Priest of the Mount Vernon Royal Arch Chapter in Needham, a member of Gethsemane-DeMolay Commandery in Newtonville and a member of the New England Grotto Association.

He was also a lifetime member of the Aptuexet Village Historical Society in Bourne.

His hobbies included woodworking, bird carving, clock-making and gardening. In his youth he was an avid hunter and fisherman.

He was a former employee of Hunts Spiller foundry in South Boston before moving on to becoming plant manager of New England Concrete Pipe Corp.'s Dedham plant from where he retired in 1967.

The beloved husband of the late Frances (Harris) and Marion (Houghton), he leaves two daughters, Martha Gjesteby of Cohasset and Janice Tuck of Denmark, Maine; six grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held at The Willows Retirement Community, 1 Lyman St. Westboro, Mass. Aug. 26 at 10:30 a.m. Interment was private. In lieu of flowers, donations to the Masonic Home, 88 Masonic Home Rd., Box 1000, Charlton, Mass. 01507 would be appreciated.

Celtic and classical concert at Glastonbury Abbey

Hingham Symphony presents the first of its "Connecting the Arts" series on Saturday, Aug. 26 at 4:30 p.m., on the lawn at Glastonbury Abbey, featuring an enchanting combination of classical and Celtic music. Seamus Connolly, who won the Dash National Fiddle Championship an unprecedented ten times, will be joined by fiddler Laurel Martin, to present traditional and rousing arrangements of Irish slow airs, reels, and set dances, as well as some of Ireland's most revered classical compositions. Connolly is director of the Irish Studies Program at Boston College, and he and Martin teach traditional Irish fiddle together at Boston College. Hingham Symphony musicians, oboist Andrew Price, soprano Karyl Ryczek and pianist Wayman Chin, will perform a selection of classical and popular music, including half of Copland's song cycle, "Twelve Poems by Emily Dickinson." Bring your own blanket or beach chair; light refreshments will be available. Tickets ($10 adults, $5 age 18 and under) are available at Hingham Public Library, the Abbey Bookstore, at the gate, or by calling 740-5694. Glastonbury Abbey is located on Rte 228, just north of Rte 3A. In case of rain, the concert will be held at the Greek Orthodox Church, 811 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset.

Post Office Square on Ripley Road is for sale.

Post Office Square is for sale

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There's another Ripley Road retail/office building up for grabs.

Jeff Thayer, an architect, who has owned 113-115 Ripley Road – dubbed Post Office Square – for a decade has put the building on the market. The building is between Pat's barbershop and Bernard's, both of which are owned separately.

Thayer is asking $645,000 for the 3,561 square-foot structure that includes several long-term leases and furnishings. The former Hallmark 100/Prudential Prime Properties building across from the post office at 103 Ripley Road, owned by Chris Ford, is also on the market, although Ford said he is open to offers to either sell or lease.

The buildings being on the market at the same time is more of a coincidence than a sign of a trend, both landlords say.

Thayer, who designed 113-115 Ripley Road for Lee Palmiter back in 1986, originally purchased the building for use as a retirement asset, structuring the mortgage so it would be paid off prior his retiring to provide income in his later years. He will stick to that plan if the building doesn't sell. Palmiter, past owner of Cohasset Cycle Sports, sold the building to Thayer after he sold his business and moved out of state in 1990.

"With a new perspective on how short life can be, I thought that with the real estate market being strong I might try to fulfill my sailing dream while I am still able to do it. That is why I am putting the building on the market."

— Jeff Thayer, owner of 113-115 Ripley Road

"Four years ago both my very young parents passed away after a four-year battle with cancer and then last year, I was in a near fatal accident," Thayer said. "I have always wanted to sail around the world every since sailing to Spain in 1983.

"With a new perspective on how short life can be, I thought that with the real estate market being strong I might try to fulfill my sailing dream while I am still able to do it. That is why I am putting the building on the market."

Ford's building became available when Hunneman & Co. Coldwell Banker bought Hallmark in May 1999; the office was subsequently consolidated with Hunneman's South Main Street office in the village.

Thayer, whose office J. Holt Thayer Architect is also in the building, said Post Office Square has seven tenants, including Springbrook Kids, a new children's toy store, and Edward Jones Investments. Other businesses there include Richardson and Knapp, a healthcare facilities consultant; Wiznor Murray, an independent representative for Big Planet telecommunications; Seneca Insurance; and Kathryn Earle, a corporate human resources consultant.

Thayer said the offices share furnished conference, reception and kitchenette areas.

"We all find that if we had larger offices with their own conference, reception and kitchen areas that much of the time, the expensive space would be little used and thus wasted," he said. "By sharing these spaces, we share the cost and still have access to them when needed."

During the building's reconstruction in 1986, almost all walls, floors, windows and roofs were replaced; the second floor was added and the front of the building was replaced with a six-foot addition which extended all the way across the front along Ripley Road, Thayer said. All new wiring, heating, air conditioning and plumbing were installed.

"The building was brought up to compliance with modern construction and fire codes while at the same time blending the exterior design into the existing exterior of the adjacent original railroad station building ," he said. Bernard's (formerly the Log 'n Line was at one time the Cohasset train station).

Initially opposed to the train, Thayer believes the town missed an opportunity not to opt for a village train station when the Greenbush Line is restored.

"It would have reinforced the village as the center of town and with the parking and platform placed mostly out of view behind the Red Lion Inn," he said. "Properly shielded by vegetation from the few residences, it would have eventually made the village shops and art center accessible to other towns and people who do not like to drive."

Thayer said he is encouraged by the village revitalization plans and said brick sidewalks and underground wiring would be a great asset to the area's natural beauty. Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private group with offices on Elm Street that hopes to build a public-private partnership with the town, is spearheading efforts to improve the village and harbor areas.

"The main goal of the village revitalization plans is to improve the infrastructure with brick sidewalks using high-quality detailing, lighting, granite curbs, etc.," he said. "I am pleased they intend to extend this sidewalk past my property on Ripley Road in include Carousel Antiques Shop.

"Being next door to the South Shore Art Center, across the street from the post office, and only one block from the duck pond, we are really a very vibrant part of Cohasset Village."

Robinson is guest at the GOP cookout

Jack E. Robinson, republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, plans to attend the Aug. 27 GOP cookout.

Gourmet cooks Julie Guild, Marge Smith and Edythe Ford will be assisted by renowned grill masters Mark Baker, Bill Grimm, Sam Pease, Peter Guild and Christy Mihos at the annual Cohasset GOP cookout to be held 4 - 7 p.m. at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, on Sunday, Aug. 27.

Reports from Beacon Hill will be made by Sen. Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Francis Marini of Hansen and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

Another highlight will be a tribute to Molly Hochkeppel, who recently announced she was retiring from several decades of service at the Patriot Ledger. She will be honored for assisting a myriad of good causes through her expert reporting.

Open to the public from counties of Norfolk, Plymouth, Bristol and Barnstable, reservations are requested and can be made by calling Janet Fogarty (383-3036), Polly Logan (383-0031), Julie Guild (383-6443), Edythe Ford (383-1648).

AG okays new town bylaws

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Warm up the presses, because the Cohasset town bylaws are being updated.

The town approved 10 new bylaws during its annual town meeting, and received word last week that the state's attorney general's office had approved all 10 bylaws — meaning they could officially be put on the books.

Seven general bylaws and three zoning bylaws were approved. The general bylaws will:

• create the combined position of director of finance and town accountant. Michael Buckley has already been appointed to the position. The town treasurer and deputy assessor will report to him. (Article 21, town meeting warrant)

• affect the wording of the Wetlands Protection bylaw. It also formally defines a vernal pool. (Article 23)

• renames section 27 of Article VII of the town bylaw, "Burglar Alarm System Regulations" and adds section 27a entitled "Fire-Alarm System Regulations." According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, among the new regulation included in section 27a is if the town fire department receives more than three false alarms from one building, the property owner can be fined. (Article 24)

• effectively establishes town "quiet hours." No deliveries will be allowed in town between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. Also, no heavy equipment is allowed to be operated between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m., except for snow plows, garbage trucks, utility crews or any other person "operating for the protection of the public health or safety." (Article 25)

• formally includes the Gulf as part of Cohasset Harbor, and extends the harbor's speed limit into the gulf. (Article 26)

• adds a section 36 onto Article VII. The section establishes criteria and guidelines for public hearings if a solid waste facility is proposed in town. (Article 29)

• requires any company collecting refuse within town to recycle. (Article 33)

Three zoning laws, which were passed by a two-thirds vote by town meeting, were also approved.

The approval of Article 16 creates a new "Technology Business District" zoning designation. Related was the approval of Article 28 which changed the zoning of the property occupied by the Cohasset Heights Landfill off Route 3A. Also, the state approved Article 31, which involves the board of health approving certain types of septic systems.

New bylaw cuts out septic middle man

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A recently approved bylaw will allow some homeowners to fix their septic systems quicker.

In March, Town Meeting approved article 31, which eliminates the need for Zoning Board of Appeals approval to repair failed septic systems, providing the replacement system is of the same capacity as the existing system.

The change affects property in the town's flood plain and watershed protection district. Property not in those districts had not been required to go before the ZBA.

ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said the change in bylaw is "absolutely sensible," and said it was "great for the town and great for the citizens to not have to troop before the board for what is semiautomatic approval anyway."

Under the old law, if a septic system failed, or a house was being sold and the septic system didn't meet Title V requirements, the homeowner would have to seek ZBA approval after receiving plan approval from the Board of Health.

"We would question [the plans] but frankly our ability to deny Title V systems were fairly remote anyway," admitted Chittick.

"I think that essentially the health requirements of putting in Title V septic systems were really more important than having people going through the routine of filing an application and paying $100, for the ZBA to turn around and approve it."

Chittick said the bylaw allows homeowners installing a Board of Health-approved replacement septic system to put in a system the same size or capacity, without requiring homeowners to sit through the long process of waiting for a ZBA meeting, presenting the plan, and then waiting for its approval.

He said the board would receive "maybe 10" applications a year and would analyze if the new system was "more injurious to the neighborhood or detrimental to public health." He said "99 times out of 100" the system would be approved.

Both health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik and health board chairman Stephen Bobo like the new bylaw.

"It's certainly reasonable," Bobo said adding, as long as the system meets all setback laws and any other issues regarding effects on wetlands or conservation land.

"It's a more streamlined process," said Chittick

That's entertainment

Marshfield Fair has smashing musical lineup

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSON@CNC.COM

It's been nearly a decade since the last horse hooves pounded down the track at the Marshfield Fair. When horse racing was phased out in 1991, fair coordinators worked hard to come up with entertainment to keep drawing big crowds to the bustling fairgrounds for the 10-day carnival. And by annually booking diverse musical acts and revving folks up with the smashing demolition derby, they've done just that.

"The horse racing used to take place all 10 days of the fair," said Carelton Chandler, one of the directors of the Marshfield Fair. "Each day, the horse racing used to take place for about seven hours. When it went out in 1991, we had 70 hours of extra time we had to fill up. That's where the entertainment came in. Now, the entertainment portion of the fair is critical." Entertainment varies throughout the more than week-long fair with everything from live music, to stunt shows and the increasingly popular demolition derby.

From folk acts, to rock and jazz performers, the Marshfield Fair musical lineup looks to offer something for every taste.

This year, the fair will feature musical venues which have, over the last decade become tradition — including the North River Blues Festival, now in its fifth year, and the Green Harbor Rhythm and Blues Festival in its fourth year.

The North River Blues Festival set for Sunday, Aug.20 will feature national acts like Coco Montoya, Basic Black, Johnny Hoy and the Bluefish, and The Bill Perry Band. The Green Harbor festival on Aug. 27 will showcase more soul-based acts like Otis Clay, Joe Bargar's Soul Providers, and the Rampage Trio.

From folk acts, to rock and jazz performers, the Marshfield Fair musical lineup looks to offer something for every taste.

John Hall, founder of both the North River and Green Harbor music festivals, moved to Marshfield in 1992.

"That was a year after the horse races stopped," Hall recalled. "I had always been a frequent visitor to the fair before I moved here, and I always thought it would be a great place for a music festival."

When Hall got himself situated in Marshfield, he founded Rhythm Room Records, which is still serves as a prevalent stop for local music aficionados.

"At that time, I wrote a letter to (Chandler), and asked if he would consider the idea of holding a music festival at the fair. The only thing I asked for was to be able to promote my store at the fair."

Chandler said yes to Hall's request, and the rest is history. Hall's idea turned into one of the fair's major attractions, and today, Hall travels the New England fair circuit where he continues to promote his store.

"I just enjoy music, and I love talking to people," he said. "This kind of thing is ideal for me. The thing about having these kinds of festivals at fairs is that they open up different options to people," he said. "And the great thing about the Marshfield Fair is that there is all types of music to choose from. If your kids can't sit still, you can take them on a few rides, then come back and see the band you want."

Hall is especially pleased with this year's festival acts.

"We have a great lineup this year. I tried to put bands together that would really compliment each other. When I put together these things, I always consider a lot of aspects like 'are they nice people?' and 'will they get along?' I love

There's a great musical mix planned at this year's fair including performances by Otis Clay, Johnny Preston, It's My Party, The Pixies Three and Herb Reed and the Platters. Marfield Fair grounds photo by Chris Bernstein, staff photographer.

What's in a name?

Euonym takes its 'punkified' pop on the club circuit

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

You may not be able to pronounce the name of the band but their music speaks for itself.

They call themselves Euonym, and they are a band whose members are rooted in the South Shore towns of Norwell and Holbrook. The band's 10-song album "Anything You Can Do" has been selling well since its January release and Euonym is taking their own unique sound on the road to Boston area clubs.

"We're sort of a pop-type band," said drummer Rick Kenney. "I always describe the band as a quartet of punktified-pop mixed with a dollop of alternative junk."

Whatever the band's sound may be, they are doing everything right in their musical journey. All the band's members are in their early 20s, and Euonym has steady gigs at Boston area clubs like T.T. The Bears Place and Great Scott's.

Euonym is also getting its fair share of radio airplay on local stations like WBCN, WFNX, and WAAF.

Paul Rouse

The band's upcoming shows include one at the Midway Café in Jamaica Plain on Aug. 20 and another one at the Lucky Dog in Worcester on Sept. 7.

During the past two years the band has been together, they have worked hard to achieve the level of success they have now. That's mostly because Euonym band members Rick Kenny, Paul Rouse, Eric McFadden and Biran O'Neil get along so well together.

Kenney and Rouse met when working at General Cinema in Braintree.

"We used to just work there and talk about the bands we had been in," Kenney said. "Finally, I invited (Rouse) over my house to jam, and we had a great time."

After they jammed together on that occasion, Rouse invited him to meet some more of his musical associates —Eric McFadden, a bass player and Brian O'Neil, a lead guitar player.

When all four met, the foundations of Euonym had been put into place. They all decided they would try playing together at a July 4 party in 1998.

"Some kid we knew was having the party," Kenney said. "That person asked us to play, and we did. I actually played that party with a makeshift drum set I put together at the last minute."

The Fourth of July gig went well and a day later, they were all at McFadden's house rehearsing as a band. But they still needed a name.

"We had a lot of trouble deciding on names," Kenney said. "We actually had our first gig at T.T. The Bears without a name. I kept saying to the rest of the band 'We should call ourselves something stupid.'"

Euonym actually comes through the efforts of a smart little girl who won a televised spelling bee by spelling that particular word correctly.

"The little girl at the spelling bee was told to spell the word Euonym," Kenney said. "She was so excited to spell the word, because she knew it. She ended up screaming the letters aloud, and she won the competition. We all thought that was pretty cool."

Ironically, the meaning of the word Euonym is "a good name," notes Kenney.

Skyline's the limit

Cabaret show comes to Quincy dinner theater

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

There are singers who can't act, and there are actors who can't sing. Cabaret, however, requires a command of both disciplines.

Four of the Boston area's finest female cabaret performers are currently demonstrating the art of the craft in J.M. Productions dinner theater presentation of "Skyline Cabaret" at Raffael's in North Quincy.

Clad in coordinated black cocktail wear, Sarah Delima, Carol O'Shaughnessy, Jan Peters and Ida Zecco begin the evening with strong ensemble work on the Rodgers and Hammerstein classics, "My Favorite Things" and "Getting to Know You."

O'Shaughnessy opens the second half of the evening with a spirited "Peter Pan" medley which leaves no doubt as to why O'Shaughnessy is often called "Boston's First Lady of Cabaret." She does everything but take flight out the window over Marina Bay.

With her co-stars perched awkwardly on stools just outside her spotlight, O'Shaughnessy skewers the often-overwrought music of Andrew Lloyd Webber with parody lyrics to the ubiquitous "Memory" from "Cats."

This isn't "Forbidden Broadway," though, so O'Shaughnessy deftly changes gears for a touching rendition of the too-seldom-heard "My Foolish Heart."

Cohasset's Delima relishes the naughty lyrics of Stephen Sondheim's "Can That Boy Foxtrot." By taking the time to explain the meaning behind the familiar words in Sondheim's "Send in the Clowns," Delima imbues the oft-performed song with a renewed sense of poignancy.

Ida Zecco shows considerable comic flair, and an ear for accents, on "The Boy From..." and "I Never Do Anything Twice."

Jan Peters is good on the humorous "My Simple Christmas." The ensemble's out-of-season, and seemingly under-rehearsed, "Hard Candy Christmas" is a disappointing closer for the first half of the show. O'Shaughnessy opens the second half of the evening with a spirited "Peter Pan" medley which leaves no doubt as to why O'Shaughnessy is often called "Boston's First Lady of Cabaret." She does everything but take flight out the window over Marina Bay.

The rousing "You're Nothing Without Me" from Cy Coleman's "City of Angels" provides a rousing duet for dueling divas, Peters and O'Shaughnessy. The pairing of voices, not to mention the dropping of lyrics, proves problematic, however, for the Delima and Zecco pairing on "Who Will Love Me As I Am?"

Delima is delightful on the cute and clever "27" in which she lampoons aging celebrities while steadfastly proclaiming her own eternal youth.

In addition to showcasing seldom heard songs, cabaret frequently presents standards in a new light. A perfect example of this comes in Peters' stunning rendition of "Shine on Harvest Moon." You may have sung along to this 1920s tune in the past, but with Peters at the microphone you'll just want to listen.

After Peters' single-handed reinvention of "Harvest Moon," it is unfortunate that such a sparkling evening closes with the predictable "Old Friends" and a half-hearted, half-sung "Cabaret" from the musical of the same name.

("Skyline Cabaret" will be performed through August 25 at Raffael's Restaurant in North Quincy. For tickets and information, call 617/786-SHOW.)

Three delicious peach desserts

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

This is the time of year for my favorite fruit – ripe, juicy peaches, which in New England are often grown and sold locally. Although one can make the case that it is hard to improve on the taste of a fresh peach, I also like to bake and poach them in August given their abundance and low cost. The following recipes are relatively easy. Neither will test much making a pie or tart. My goal was to improve on older recipes that often used too much sugar and too many spices, obscuring the wonderful flavor of fresh, ripe peaches.

All three recipes require peeling. I tested a variety of methods and found that the simplest technique is to place peaches in boiling water for 30 seconds and then immerse them in ice water to stop the cooking. (Be sure to use plenty of ice.) Let them cool for 2 minutes. The skins will now peel off easily if the peaches are ripe.

BAKED PEACHES WITH BOURBON AND BROWN SUGAR

As is often the case, too much sugar (and sometimes bourbon) was used in older recipes, detracting from the fresh flavors of the fruit. Here is a simple, lower-sugar recipe. The juices from the peaches make a simple sauce with the brown sugar. Note that the size and ripeness of the peaches will affect both the baking time and the quality of this dessert.

1/4 cup light brown sugar, lightly packed
Pinch nutmeg
3 peaches, peeled, halved and pitted
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon bourbon
Vanilla ice cream for serving

Heat oven to 400 degrees. Butter a 2-quart baking dish and evenly coat with sugar, adding a pinch of nutmeg on top. Place peaches in dish, cut-side down. Scatter butter, cut into small pieces, on top. Add bourbon. Cover with aluminum foil and bake for 15 minutes. Remove from oven, remove foil, and check to see if the butter and sugar are forming a sauce at the bottom of the dish. Stir, if necessary, to combine. Cover and continue baking for 10 minutes or until peaches are just soft. Time will vary depending on size and ripeness of peaches. Remove from oven and cool for 5 minutes. Invert each peach half into a bowl and top with a scoop of vanilla ice cream. Spoon sauce over top, and serve.

Serves 6 (one-half peach per person)

POACHED PEACHES WITH LIME AND GINGER

This recipe requires perfectly ripe peaches, as they are not really poached; the flavoring syrup is cooled before it is added to the fruit. If your peaches are underripe, I suggest pouring the hot syrup over them and then chilling. Crystallized ginger is found in bottles in the spice section of supermarkets. This dessert can be served with ice cream, a dense cake, or cookies such as biscotti or shortbread.

1/2 cup sugar
1 cup water
1 cup white wine
1/4 cup crystallized ginger
4 ripe peaches, peeled, pitted, and sliced

1. Juice the lime. Combine the sugar, water, wine, and ginger in a saucepan. Bring to a boil, reduce to a simmer, cover, and cook for 7 minutes. Remove from heat and add 1 tablespoon lime juice. Chill for 1 hour.

2. Toss peaches with remaining lime juice, and reserve in a non-reactive bowl.

3. Pour syrup over peaches and toss. Refrigerate for 1 hour.

4. Serve slightly chilled but not cold from the refrigerator. Serves 4

PEACH BUCKLE

This is really a simple cake made with fruit and a crumb topping. In a taste test of five cobblers, a betty, a crisp, and a buckle, the buckle won first place from the tasters. (A buckle is a simple yellow cake batter baked with fruit and finished with a crumble topping.)

Cake Batter
1 cup plus 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/4 teaspoon kosher salt
10 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
1/2 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3 large eggs
3 cups peeled peaches cut into bite-size pieces
1 egg white
1/2 teaspoon lemon zest, minced

Topping
1/2 cup flour
1/4 cup light brown sugar, lightly packed
1 tablespoon sugar
1/4 cup pecans or walnuts, toasted
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon orange zest, minced
4 tablespoons unsalted butter, slightly softened, cut into small pieces

Cream or ice cream for serving, optional

1. Heat oven to 375 degrees. Butter an 8-inch-square baking dish. Whisk together the flour, baking powder, and salt in a small bowl.

2. For the cake: Whip the butter, sugar, and vanilla in a separate bowl on high speed in an electric mixer until light, about 4 minutes. Beat in the eggs, one egg at a time, and the egg white, until incorporated, scraping the sides of the bowl with a spatula between additions. Add zest. Gently mix flour mixture into the batter and fold in peaches. Place into prepared pan and spread evenly.

3. For the topping: Add all the ingredients except the butter to a medium bowl and mix with an electric mixer until thoroughly combined, about 30 seconds. Add the butter and mix until it is crumbly, about 3 minutes. Scatter over the cake batter.

4. Bake 45 to 55 minutes, or until cake is set in the middle and a tester comes out clean. Cool on a wire rack. Serve warm with heavy cream (whipped or liquid) or ice cream in large bowls.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 16

This day has its challenges. Wake up in a good mood. The Pisces moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Pluto that may generate emotional thunderstorms. Keep it light. In addition, a polarity of Mercury and Uranus warns you to expect the unexpected. Avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. Do not make important decisions, sign contracts or launch new projects. At 3:58 p.m. the moon forms its last major contact to a planet and becomes inactive. This is an evening to kick back, relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, AUG. 17

This is a 'do nothing, relax and recharge your batteries' kind of day. The inactive Pisces moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac. No major planetary activity occurs. New starts are off limits until tomorrow.

FRIDAY, AUG. 18

Get an early start to this day. The moon enters fiery Aries at 1:44 a.m., and the green light goes on for new beginnings across the board. Influences rate high for launching important ventures, promoting ideas, productivity. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. A lunar alignment to Mars makes the evening prime for enjoying sports, physical activities. Late night partying also gets the green light.

SATURDAY, AUG. 19

An Aries moon continues to set a fast pace. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way early in the day. A lunar alignment to Uranus urges you to be open to new ideas, new experiences. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SUNDAY, AUG. 20

The Aries moon becomes inactive at 5:14 a.m. until 9:31 a.m., when a Taurus moon takes over. However, the planet Pluto takes center stage today. Pluto, standing at 10-degrees of Sagittarius, will begin to travel in direct motion at 6:41 p.m. Its influence may bring up deep feelings, buried emotions. You may feel impelled to make critical, life-altering decisions. Because Pluto is a slow-moving planet, this influence has affected the last few days and will continue to linger.

MONDAY, AUG. 21

This is a day to finish old business and prepare for new starts. The sun and Mercury come together at the tail end (29-degrees) of Leo. Tomorrow they will enter the sign Virgo. The moon continues to travel in Taurus. However, there are a couple of rough spots. A lunar alignment to Mars is in effect between 7:17-10:17 a.m. Sidestep stubborn, obstinate behavior. Keep a cool head. A 90-degree alignment to Uranus at 6:35 p.m. may interrupt the flow of the day. Be flexible. Influences turn around at 7:07 p.m., when the moon interacts with Venus. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

TUESDAY, AUG. 22

Mercury moves into Virgo at 6:11 a.m., remaining there until Sept. 7. The sun follows Mercury into Virgo at 3:49 p.m. In addition, the sun and Mercury form 90-degree angles to Saturn today and tomorrow. Stress management is important. Don't take on more than you can handle. Focus on the positives of a situation rather than getting caught up in the limitations. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 2:51 p.m., when the Taurus moon becomes inactive. A Gemini moon takes over at 2:55 p.m. Take quiet time out for yourself; meditate for peace of mind.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 23

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn culminates at 7:15 a.m. In addition, a lunar polarity to Pluto may generate stormy emotional weather. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive attitude. Astrological storm clouds move out in the afternoon. The Gemini moon forms easy contacts to Mars at 4:08 p.m. and Uranus at 10:23 p.m. All social activities are highlighted. Get back in the swing of favorite sports or exercise programs.

doing it. It's time consuming, but it's well worth it."

If blues aren't your bag, the fair will also serve up some classic oldies music during Oldies Day (Aug.19) featuring bands like The Pixies Three, Little Joe and the Thrillers, and Johnny Preston. On the fair's Senior Citizens' Day (Aug.22), Herb Reed and The Platters will be firing up an easy-going musical set.

There will be other musical acts at the fair including a special performance Aug. 26 by Marshfield's own Chrissi Poland, who is currently enjoying the success of her debut album "Mellow and Sublime."

And the best thing about all the music at the fair is that its free with the price of admission.

"Eventually, we'd like to bring in some even bigger bands," Chandler said. "But we feel like our musical lineups have gone over very well."

For those who aren't into watching live music, try watching live car crashes at the demolition derby, which became another one of the fair's main attractions when horse racing subsided.

Growing in popularity every year, the Marshfield Fair's Demolition Derby always draws a crowd.

"People love a crash," Chandler quipped.

Dan Connolly is one of those people. Connolly serves as one of Marshfield's assistant harbormasters, but when he gets the chance, he takes part in the fair's demolition derby. Last year was his first year of participating in the event, and now he's hooked.

"Where else can you do something like this legally?," he said. "Before I actually took part in the derby, I was a big fan of watching it."

Connolly said his friend Danny Sullivan who owns DJ Sullivan Collision Center in Marshfield finally convinced him to do it.

"(Sullivan) is preparing all three of my cars," Connolly said, noting he'll be taking part in the event on behalf of Marshfield Community Christmas.

"This is an amazing event," Connolly added, "and you can only see it once a year. There's nothing like it anywhere else in the northeast as far as I know."

The demolition derby will take place over the course of three different evenings at the fair — Aug. 21, 24, 25 —and for the first time, one of the demolition tracks will be in the shape of a figure eight.

Stunt show enthusiasts won't want to miss the "The Toyota Hollywood Stunt Show" on Aug. 26

"It's all about providing family entertainment," Chandler said. "I love it. There's things going on all the time, and this is just a great destination."

For more information on the Marshfield Fair's entertainment schedule call (781) 834-6620 or log onto their website at www.marshfieldfair.org. Predatory mortgage lending targets seniors

Unfavorable terms can lead to foreclosure

By Marilyn Jackson
STAFF WRITER

The Division of Banks wants to tighten existing regulations against predatory mortgage lending.

"In recent years, there has been an increase in the number of individuals who have lost their homes because they have dealt with unscrupulous rogue lenders out to take advantage of them," said Bonita Irving, deputy commissioner for community reinvestment and outreach.

"We want to strengthen existing regulations and try and protect consumers."

"In recent years, there has been an increase in the number of individuals who have lost their homes because they have dealt with unscrupulous rogue lenders out to take advantage of them."

Bonita Irving, deputy commissioner for community reinvestment and outreach

Predatory lending is one step beyond sub-prime lending, she explained, where the terms of a loan are unconscionably harsh and are based not on the ability to pay but on the equity available in the property that is being mortgaged.

"Even going back to 1997, we saw a lot of people getting involved in sub-prime lending," she said.

Most loans are classified as prime or conventional loans, for people with good credit histories, Irving said. Sub-prime lending is offered to people who may not fit into a conventional mortgage product, who may have had past credit problems and, therefore, have a higher risk. They pay a higher interest rate than on a conventional loan.

Where you cross the line from sub-prime lending into predatory lending is difficult to determine exactly. "There is no one set of standards. "The biggest difference is that predatory lending is more destructive," said Irving.

"For instance, we have found accounts of individuals who have lost their homes. They may have had a $10,000 or $20,000 mortgage, and these lenders, who are skilled at winning people's trust, have convinced them to refinance, perhaps to make repairs. The individuals end up with a loan they can't pay back or have difficulty repaying."

Predatory lenders "are really savvy about identifying these people, often targeting the elderly or people in minority communities who may not have the level of knowledge or financial sophistication" to avoid being seduced by seemingly favorable terms.

"If you see an advertisement that says, 'no credit no problem,' that should be a red flag," she said.

Predatory lending was the subject of a hearing last week before the Federal Reserve Bank, focusing on the home equity lending market. Last spring, the Federal Reserve held a similar hearing regarding mortgage lending. The proposed state regulations the Banking Commissioner Thomas Curry presented last week would not further restrict conventional lending practices or responsible sub-prime mortgage lending.

The new rules would prohibit making loans where the borrower has no reasonable ability or means of repaying based upon verified income sources and would ban writing balloon mortgages with a term of less than seven years.

Loan "flipping" would also be prohibited. Refinancing would be allowed only after a two-year period or after new or additional funds were advanced to the borrowers. In addition, the proposed regulations would lower the high rate of loan interest rates and loan fee thresholds and would extend the existing high rate loan regulations to certain open-end credit transactions.

Hearings on these proposals will be held at 1 p.m. Sept. 19 in the fifth floor hearing room at 1 South Station in Boston. Another hearing is slated for 10:30 a.m. Sept. 20 at the Worcester City Council Chambers, and a third hearing will be held at noon Sept. 21 at the Holyoke Heritage State Park Visitor Center. The proposed regulations are also available on the banking division's website: http://www.state.ma.us/dob.

Consumer education is extremely important, Irving continued. She said the Division of Banks is working with several non-profit agencies, including the Mass. Community and Banking Council, the National Consumer Law Center and the Mass. Bankers Association, to help educate homeowners and prospective homebuyers.

"We have established a mortgage hotline, based on a program in Boston called 'Don't Borrow Trouble.' Employees of the Division of Banks will answer the hotline calls. We want to expand this on a statewide basis. Our goal is hopefully to do foreclosure prevention. Too many people will contact this agency looking for assistance and they are on the brink of losing their house and are facing an auction in 24 hours. This will not be counseling, but a source of information. And a caller could ask whether something is a loan scam," she said.

The hotline phone number is 1-800-495-2265. In addition, the Mortgage Bankers Association of America has joined forces with the National Council on Economic Education to teach potential homebuyers what they need to know when applying for a mortgage, including how to avoid unfair credit practices or potential predatory lending. A pilot program will begin this fall in five states, including Massachusetts.

"We want our customers to be educated customers," so they can realize the American dream of homeownership, said James Murphy, vice president of MBAA and president of the New England Realty Resources Inc. in Boston. The program, Homebuyer Education and Learning Partnership, will build on an economic education program in various schools that stresses the importance of establishing and keeping a good credit history and will expand to include adults.

IN BRIEF

Local Conway agents earn trip to Florida

Several agents in Jack Conway & Co.'s sales offices recently returned from an all-expenses paid trip to the Mariott Harbor Beach Resort in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., as part of the realty firm's incentive program.

Attendees included Mary Pecce, Elizabeth Charlton and Alice Brennan of the Scituate office; Margaret MacNeil of the Abington sales center; Grace Alvey of Marshfield; Rita Holmberg and Tom Sapienza of Whitman; Lila Coyle and Kathy Marini of Hanson.

In addition, Chairman Jack Conway, Vice Chairman John Reardon, President Richard F. Cahill, administrative assistant Marguerite MacDonald, technology director Toni Manning, Regional Vice President Ralph Grassia and public relations director Christopher Haraden accompanied the Conway contingent on the trip to the Sunshine State.

Each year, the company hosts two educational seminars in tropical locations for its top-producing sales agents and managers. More than 45 Conway agents and their guests took part in this year's trip, which featured four days of sightseeing, golf and shopping, as well as workshops on zoning codes, technology trends and financing issues.

In January, 50 salespeople and managers took part in another Conway-sponsored trip, the annual Seminar in the Sun, which was held in San Jose, Costa Rica.

"Our sales agents and managers are the most important part of the company, and this is our way to say thank you for all they do every day in the field," said chairman Jack Conway.

Maintaining the August landscape

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

With clippers, tarp and cultivator in hand, I ventured forth into the jungle that surrounds my home on another damp, overcast summer morning. The August landscape has never looked so lush and spring-like. In past years, dragging hoses and complaining about heat and drought were the typical topics of conversation for gardeners during the latter half of the summer. This growing season will be remembered as the year of a perpetual spring, when mold, mildew, rot and slugs prevailed, with gardeners moaning about having to mow their lawns so frequently.

Green thumbs up

Weeds thrive, no matter what Mother Nature offers in the way of heat and moisture, but this summer they are particularly robust. During drier seasons, they tend to be more obvious, flourishing while our preferred plants suffer from lack of moisture, making it easy to identify and extricate the intruders. This summer, they tend to be more difficult to recognize, blending in with all the luxuriant vegetation, although a few have reached such giant proportions, they tower above even the happiest of perennial plants.

Lurking in our borders, many of these invaders are in the process of forming plentiful quantities of seed. Even crabgrass, which usually appears as a tell-tale, lime-green carpet by summer's end, has managed to escape detection, sneaking about in our lawns and gardens, ready to disperse thousands of offspring for next season. Carefully scrutinize each garden for undesirable, wildflower intruders, extricating as many as possible. If their numbers are overwhelming, focus on those having seed heads followed by those in flower. One advantage to our moist soils is that even those weeds with taproots, including dock and dandelions, lift out of the ground with reasonable ease. For many gardeners, a huge stack of weeds and a freshly cultivated border are one of the most gratifying aspects of maintaining a garden.

As you weed, keep your pruner handy and remove spent flowers, seed heads and flower stalks. When "deadheading" is performed in combination with weeding and cultivating, the overgrown perennial border will quickly regain a more restrained, tidy appearance.

The primary reason for deadheading, however, is to enable plants to put their energy into making new growth, whether that be to form stronger root systems, larger plants, or to encourage the development of new flowers. A plant grows and flowers for the purpose of creating new plants, usually through the production of seed. Annuals, in particular, complete their life cycle in one growing season and work endlessly to flower and subsequently to make seeds to scatter for the following year. If spent flowers are removed, the plant is more likely to continue producing flowers in an effort to produce seeds.

Most annuals will look and perform their best when regularly deadheaded. Marigolds, petunias, cosmos, and zinnias, to name only a few, respond positively to the frequent removal of spent blossoms. Some annuals, such as impatiens and begonias, continue to flower profusely without removing spent flowers. Later this season, it may be to your advantage to allow the seed heads to form on certain annuals in order to perpetuate these plants for the following year. Portulaca, larkspur, cleome, calendula, bachelor buttons, alyssum, cosmos and snap dragons readily seed down and may pop up all over the garden next season, generally in all the wrong places, but these seedlings can be transplanted to more appropriate locations once they appear. It should be noted that the offspring of many of these hybrid annuals may be unlike their parents in color, size and vigor, including some rather homely children, but there are often some unique and pretty surprises.

The majority of perennial plants should also be deadheaded to

New Conway associates

The following new associates were recently added to the staff of Jack Conway & Co.

Donna Flanagan and Patricia Little joined the staff of Jack Conway & Co.'s Abington real estate sales office. Flanagan lived in Virginia for 11 years before returning in 1996 to Whitman, the hometown of her husband, Allen. She is the former cosmetics department manager for Wal-Mart Stores and has two daughters, Dawne and Ashley. Flanagan said she decided to work for Conway after having a positive experience purchasing her home through the company. Little, who lives in Abington, worked at the Sears department store in Brockton for more than 15 years.

Harvey Gokey, Joe Saccardo and Thomas Spellman joined the staff of the Weymouth office. Gokey is an avid antique collector who is the former owner of Gokey's Stripping & Refinishing Service. He lives in Weymouth with his wife, Carole. Saccardo lives in South Weymouth and participates in several local and national organizations including the Weymouth Elks, Knights of Columbus and the Semper Fi Society. Spellman previously was a distribution liaison for Star Markets and worked in the supermarket industry for 17 years. He is a U.S. Navy veteran and lives in Weymouth with his wife, Teresa, and two children, Shawn and Nicole.

Chris D'Allessandro joined the staff of the Norwell office. D'Allessandro is a Scituate resident who grew up in Norwell. Before coming to Conway, she managed her family's business, Del's Radio in Hanover. She also completed sales courses at Newbury College.

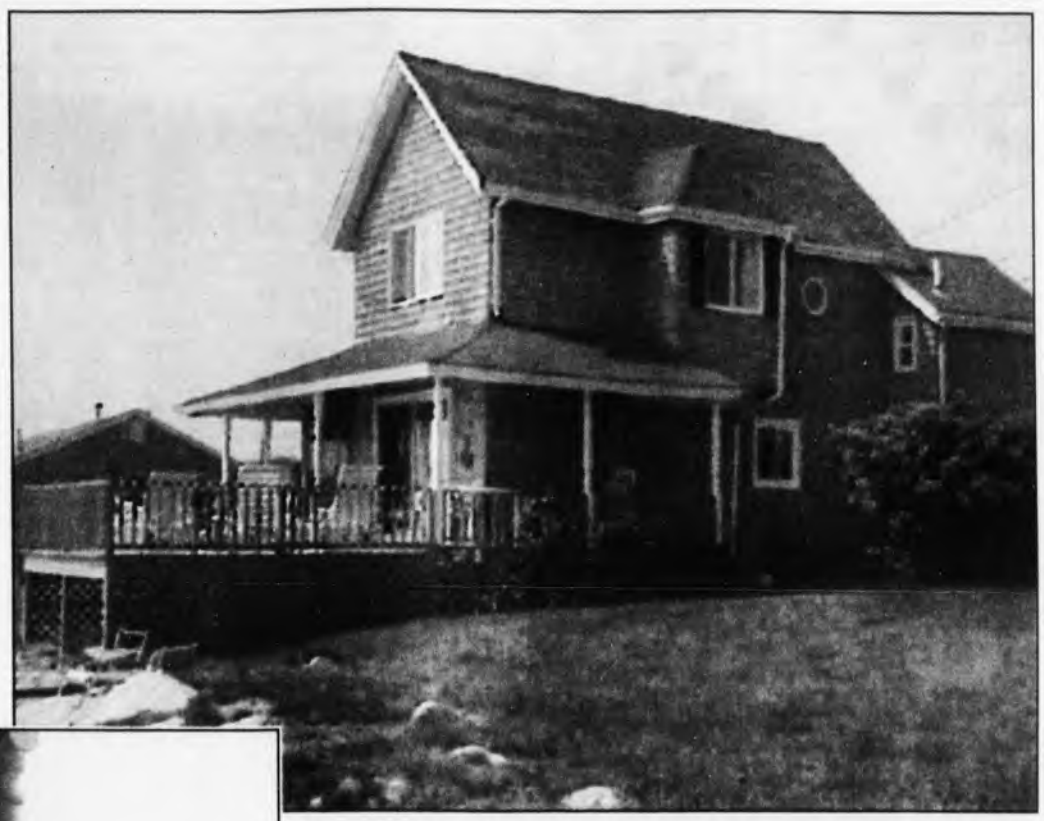
Victorianesque oceanfront



Rarely do such properties come on the market. Perfectly situated on the "High Road" near the site of the historic Fairview Inn, this ocean-front charmer must be seen.

Built around the turn of the century, it offers the period details that make such homes special. The lovingly cared-for, inviting interior says "forget your cares." The soothing sound of the sea gently massages away the concerns of the day. Relaxation truly begins here.

This year-round home offers the charm of yester-year and the conveniences of today, including an ocean view, breakfast nook, basement and attic for storage.

"On a clear day..." you can see forever or seemingly so. Ships and vessels of all kinds pass before you on their way to Boston and Cape Cod.

encourage the formation of larger clumps or to promote secondary bloom stalks. As with annuals, plants allowed to go to seed may produce seedlings which emerge next season in unwanted locations. Many of these offspring may be identical to their parents or attractive variations on the original which can be transplanted to another border or shared with other gardening enthusiasts. Other seedlings, however, may be unattractive or revert to vigorous, aggressive intruders which could potentially crowd out more desirable cultivars. This is particularly true of columbines and tall phlox. As most perennials require a second season to reach maturity and flower, it may be wiser to eliminate the potential for a host of sometimes unidentifiable seedlings.

Biennial plants including foxgloves, money plant and forget-me-nots, should be allowed to go to seed each year to ensure a perpetual source of these plants which take two years to complete their life cycles, the first year producing only foliage followed by flowers the second growing season. Sprinkle seeds from ripe seed pods in locations where you would prefer to have them grow next season although there are bound to be surprise offspring all over the border. The following year, thin and transplant the seedlings to encourage large, healthy plants. Many of these seedlings have germinated in the past few weeks and should produce flowers next year.

Parent & Baby

Addressing behavior before it's an issue

By Mac and Barbara Bledsoe

So often when people ask us for help with their children's behavior they include the phrase "What if they don't ... ?"

It seems so many parents want to jump to the consequences of failure before even considering the concept of structuring a situation of success. In a nutshell, they seem to be more worried about reacting to what their kids have done wrong rather than working in a preventative process of teaching, before their children are in crisis.

But you can give your children some solid reasons to adjust their behavior in a positive manner before problems arise.

RESPECT FOR AUTHORITY : "Do it because society says so in formal ways." Start at the earliest of ages teaching your children that a civilized world will always have rules and laws. Teach them these rules and laws are not an annoyance; they are an aid to us all and especially to them. Rules and laws protect our rights, privileges, property, and even our lives. (Warning: You cannot speed and then demand that your children drive the speed limit.)

APPROPRIATE BEHAVIOR : "Do it because society says so, in less formal ways."

You won't be fined or sent to jail for violating any of these rules but many times they may be just as important to obey. These rules fall under the category of manners, or social customs, but they often are the standards by which your children's character is judged.

HELP : "I can't do this without your help!" Many times a simple request for help will work wonders as a limit upon a child's behavior. Think about it: when you ask your kid for help you are sending very important messages. First, you are saying, "You are a very capable person. Look, I'm giving you an important task to do!" Next, you are saying, "You are a trusted person because this job requires that I trust you." Finally, you are saying, "A family is a place where we all participate simply because we need each other."

PEACE : "Do this simply because it will make your life much more peaceful and simple."

Sometimes things that may seem very basic to us must be explained in detail to our children. Make your home a peaceful place by practicing what you preach. Model cheerful and polite requests for compliance rather than shouting angry demands and watch their behavior match yours.

PRACTICALITY: "This job needs doing... by you." One of the most hirable skills in today's world is the ability to see a job that needs doing, to be able to figure out a way to do it efficiently. Give this ability to your children by giving them jobs to do (simple at first) and then getting out of their way and letting them do the whole job, start to finish.

DECISION MAKING: "You have a choice to make; what are you going to do?"

This should be started as early as possible. "Which pair of socks do you want to wear?" Then hand them bigger and bigger decisions like, "Here's the map. Which route do you think we should we take?" Next time ask, "Now that you have picked the road to travel what time should we leave?" Later seek their advice on tough personnel issues you bring home from work.

Then give them $50 and ask them to buy five days worth of groceries with it. Follow with bigger jobs and bigger decisions that go with them. Continually ask for their opinion about issues that surround you in life. We learn to make decisions by making them. It's the same example you heard earlier, "Put them back on the bike!" When they make a bad decision, don't punish them. Tell them you admire their courage for making the decision in the first place, then ask, "What did you learn from that decision?

LEARNING: "What can you learn from this? Life is one big lesson." While driving in the car it is quicker and easier to simply separate quarreling children. However, in the long run, separating them really winds up teaching behavior the exact opposite from the logical goal. Separating them teaches them that when people disagree, the desired response is to separate. (No wonder we have such high divorce rates!) It is more logical to approach two fighting kids with a goal of teaching them some effective ways to deal with quarrels and disagreements. Teach them by role-playing. It takes planning, thought, time, patience, and lots of care to teach skills of compromise and negotiation but these skills last a lifetime!

You may not succeed on the first few tries but one thing is guaranteed... if you stop trying to teach, you will fail. Too many parents are willing to say, "I have tried everything," after a few failures instead of simply saying, "Oops, I just found another way to teach this that didn't work, so I had better look around for another way!"

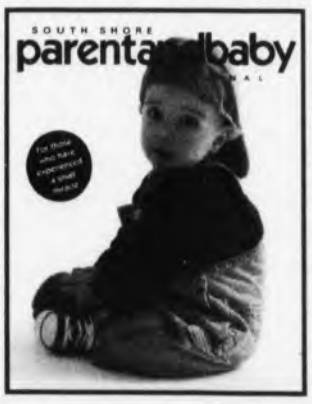
This month in Parent and Baby Journal

The September issue of Parent and Baby Journal features a variety of articles for parents with young children.

The upcoming edition offers tips on how to prepare youngsters for the new school year. Dr. Peter Gorski, president of the WellChild Foundation in Boston, suggests that thinking ahead about how to ease the transition into the autumn routines can help prepare children to hit the ground smiling.



Also featured in this month's edition are articles on breast feeding anxiety, postpartum depression, and the theory of multiple intelligences in children.

Parent and Baby Journal is published monthly in five separate geographic zones by Community Newspaper Company. The free publication can be found at several locations, including local grocery stores, toy stores, doctor and dental offices. Check out our website to find a location nearest you.

Subscriptions cost $12 for one year, and $18 for two years. Subscribers are invited to sign up for a monthly electronic newsletter for information about what's inside Parent and Baby Journal. The newsletter also provides a schedule for upcoming online chats that give parents a chance to pose questions to experts who contribute to the journal.

We should honor children's honesty and sensitivity

By Dr. Peter Gorski

"It's not nice to share food!!!"

Startled by that verbal slap on the hand from three-year-old Melissa, I lost my grip and the inviting looking morsel fell onto the table. Minutes earlier, I had joined Melissa and three of her preschool peers as they began their daily lunchtime ritual. Each child staked a claim to a side of the low square table and carefully unwrapped their delectable fare.

With a combination of suspense and pride, they opened their packages, one item at a time. Indeed, each carrot, pea or raisin seemed to have been sealed in an individual swatch of cellophane. Piece by piece, the kids relished their midday meal. Michaela raised her celery stalk above her head and slowly twirled it full circle while she considered which aspect to bite. I could feel my own mouth salivating as I watched the ingenuous child will an ordinary vegetable into a delicacy. To my left, Sam teased open his favorite bag, the one with the peanut butter and fluff sandwich. One bit and he reached the state of beatitude. I looked to my right just as Carrie removed a gnarly green specimen that appeared to be either a chip or slice of sandpaper. She noticed my bemused interest and acted quickly to relieve my discomfort.

"It's a veggie stick! They're good. Want to try one?" Stalling as I considered the risk involved, I asked "Do you always have those with your lunch? You parents really want you to be healthy, don't they?"

"My babysitter made this lunch," Carrie informed me.

I had forgotten about the daily juggling act that most parents perform, with or without the help of family, neighbors or hired help.

That's when Melissa lowered the boom. As Carrie handed me one of those bilious plastic shapes to try, the tornado struck. Whirling into the air, Melissa summoned her full breath and bellowed that fateful epithet: "It's not nice to share food!"

For a moment, I wasn't sure what happened. Were we okay? Had divine intervention used the vehicle of a young girl to save me from fatal poisoning? Or was she insanely mad at me for accepting another child's offering? I gradually regained my senses when my heart rate slowed enough to permit blood to return to my brain and other vital organs. Bowing to Melissa's evidently moral authority, I softly inquired as to why it was that Carrie's act of kindness prompted such a strong reaction. To myself, I wondered if Melissa had been so deprived of parental favor, attention and love that she could not tolerate the generosity of others. Perhaps she needed to manipulate every occasion so that she alone emerged as the beneficiary. I know that children sometime develop selfish and aggressive behavior as an unfortunate way to defend themselves from continuing to suffer pain from the emotional neglect of primary care-giving adults in their lives.

Boy, was I ever wrong! "You never know if someone could get sick from it," Melissa explained.

Not only had I failed to appreciate that Melissa was attempting to protect me from possible harm, I also completely forgot to consider an important possibility – lots of people are allergic to certain foods. Melissa's thoughtful parents taught her to care for the well-being of others.

If you didn't know the person you were dining with, and you didn't know exactly what your food was made of, it's best not to risk the other person's health. Just because your food doesn't make you sick doesn't mean everyone else is safe. One girl's veggie stick could in fact be another man's poison.

I left that preschool lunch table more embarrassed, yet even more understanding than when I had arrived. We adults can learn so much wisdom from children if we honor their emotional honesty and sensitivity. Thank you, Melissa, for the vivid reminder that my perspective is just that – mine. Since I visited with you recently, I think differently when people speak or act. Sure, I still react to what I hear or see, but I try to hold onto my reaction until I find out if how I feel is really how the person wants me to feel.

Chances are, it's my quick judgement that isn't nice.

Booking through a travel agency

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I just read your column mentioning the passenger who was stranded in Newark and had trouble getting her money back, even though the airline couldn't get her to her final destination. We had a similar problem last year.

Using senior coupon vouchers, we flew on American Airlines to St. Maarten via San Juan, and due to a hurricane we couldn't get to St. Maarten. American paid to put us up in a hotel for one night, but not the second night.

We finally had to return home. But American refused to refund our money, even though a couple traveling with us, who bought their ticket through a travel agency, got their fare refunded. Can you intervene on our behalf with American?

A. As I understand American's Rule 240, in its contract of carriage, which covers situations like this, even if a passenger can't get to a final destination because of an act of God ("force majeure event" in airlinese), then that passenger is entitled to a refund.

After a little back and forth, American saw it that way, too. They've agreed to give you travel vouchers totaling $548, which should help pay for another set of four senior coupons.

Two lessons here:

First, the travelers who booked through a travel agency had someone to go to but for them.

Second, travelers who are stranded or delayed in such circumstances should always get a copy of the airline's full (not abbreviated) contract of carriage to see what their rights are and send a copy to the customer service department when asking for a refund.

Q. On June 24, my daughter, granddaughter and I boarded Premier Cruise Line's Big Red Boat in New York for a seven-day Canadian cruise. On June 26, in Boston, the cruise was aborted and we were all told to disembark and were bused to Penn Station in New York — no hotel reservations or plane reservations back home.

We enjoyed every minute of what little we sampled of the cruise — the food, service and entertainment — and now they are offering a full refund plus another free cruise for all of us, although we have to pay port charges and airfare (we didn't buy the airfare through the cruise line and we declined the insurance, so the airfare is our responsibility they tell us).

Also, we have to select three possible dates for the new cruise and the cruise line will get back to us telling us which one we'll get, so it's hard to buy advance purchase airfare. Should we accept this as a fair settlement or should we ask for more?

A. This situation once again demonstrates the value of cruise insurance. I think that the offer sounds fair (your mini cruise to Boston compensates in part for the inconvenience you suffered).

I think I'd go back to Premier and ask them to absorb the port charges, however.

Q. I have Blue Cross/Blue Shield health insurance and want to know if it covers me when I travel abroad. I'll be traveling with my mother, who is on Medicare. Does Medicare cover her when she travels overseas?

A. Blue Cross does cover medical expenses when you're out of the United States, and has arrangements with over 100 hospitals in dozens of countries around the world. You can find a complete list at www.bluecares.com or get more information by calling (800) 810-BLUE 24 hours a day.

Medicare, in contrast, does not provide coverage outside the United States, so it's vitally important to obtain coverage from a travel insurance firm like Travel Guard at (877) 216-4885 or www.travelguard.com.

To play it extra safe when traveling in less-developed countries, it's also a good idea to get emergency evacuation coverage, even if you have Blue Cross/Blue Shield.

Q. I have a dog and hate to leave him in a kennel when I travel. I've considered hiring a pet sitter, but I don't know of any resources near me. Is there an organization listing pet sitters, either on the Web or elsewhere?

George Hobica

A. I have a dog, too, and I've never put her in a kennel. Dogs are much happier in their own surroundings (having their people gone for a long period of time is stressful enough).

Two Web sites you might check out are www.petsitters.org and www.petsitters.com. You could also check the classified ads of your local newspaper, or contact your vet or pet groomer. Another option I've used is to ask a friend or relative who might live in a cramped apartment or who might like a change of scenery to house sit for you, pet included.

Some pet sitters just come a few times a day to walk and feed your dog; others will stay in your home, but that's rare. Either way, it's a better deal than a kennel.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

What's in a name?

Despite the band's unusual and difficult to pronounce name, Euonym has developed its music to an extremely professional level, covering a broad spectrum of musical tastes.

"We incorporate a lot of styles into our music," Kenney said. "We do a lot of Rock, but we also do some pop stuff, some easy listening, and other styles too."

"I like to think of our music as straight up, kick-you-in-the-teeth Rock 'n' Roll," Rouse added.

Of Rouse, Kenney said "He is just one incredible songwriter. We've all gotten better over the last couple of years, though."

Rouse said songs come to him in various ways.

"Sometimes I'll just hear something in my head and I immediately try to capture it," he said. "Often, I'll sit down with something in mind, and I'll write a song in minutes. When I bring something to the rest of the guys, it always sounds good. Our chemistry is definitely there."

Euonym's influences include modern bands like Weezer, the Foo Fighters, Better Than Ezra, and Radiohead, among others. The members of the band also listen to classic Rock acts like Led Zeppelin, Credence Clearwater Revival and The Who.

"As a band, we all like different types of music," Kenney said. "That's a concept that's cool and tough at the same time, because at times, all four of us are coming from completely different musical arenas. We work with a myriad of different styles from Tom Petty to Blink 182."

"Our live show have a lot of energy to them," Rouse added. "It's fast and furious, and it keeps getting better. The first time we all jammed together all I could think was 'Man, this is right.'"

Rouse said although Euonym is currently promoting their first album, the band has been working on a bunch of new songs, some of which they have debuting at recent shows.

"Eventually, we'd like to do some more East Coast stuff," Kenney said. "We'd like to start playing shows in places like Providence, Western Massachusetts, New York, and maybe as far as Baltimore. But right now, we're just focusing on the gigs we have because we all love to perform."

Jokingly, Kenney added "I guess we'll just wait for that phone call from Spinal Tap."

For more information on Euonym log onto their website at www.Euonym.net or e-mail the band at emcfadde@ccs.neu.edu.

Subdivision is slated off Beechwood St.

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The stage is set for a new seven-home, 40-acre development off Beechwood Street, that would see more than one-third of the land remain undeveloped.

The Cohasset Planning Board gave an early nod to the subdivision proposed by Cohasset resident and developer Dustin Wheelwright, last week. Because of some incomplete plans, the board was not able to make a final recommendation on the proposal, but did consider waiver requests for the project.

"We wanted to get waivers out of the way first," said board chairman Al Moore. "It wouldn't make much sense to go through the process of approval, without having addressed some of the very basic issues."

Moore said the project "without any holdups, should move forward fairly quickly. Everyone seems to be on the same page."

Plans call for seven, 3,000-plus square foot, custom-built homes to be constructed on lots ranging from 1.59 acres to 4.64 acres off Beechwood Street on the west side of Rte. 3A. Neil Murphy, of the Cohasset engineering and land surveying firm Murphy & Wait, P.C., said in his presentation to the board that 19 acres will remain undeveloped because of its proximity to wetlands.

Plans call for seven, 3,000-plus square foot, custom-built homes to be constructed on lots ranging from 1.59 acres to 4.64 acres.

The main road into the development will be named Ox Pasture Lane. Just one house will front the road. Two common driveways will be created at the end of the lane.

Final Red Lion Inn plans topped off with a toast

Project should be completed by November

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

After what Red Lion Inn owner Gerde Ordelheide and the Cohasset Planning Board have been through together, one could understand why they shared a drink at the board's Aug. 16 meeting.

The planning board gave Ordelheide's renovation plans for the Red Lion Inn and the adjacent Lilac House its final approval, after more than 18 months of haggling.

Ordelheide was so relieved and grateful to have reached the final stage that he brought champagne for himself and members of the board to celebrate with.

"It was to show my appreciation to the town for their help," said Ordelheide, who obtained board chairman Al Moore's approval for the toast before hand. "[He said] after a long project, it would be a nice gesture.

"Though I suppose he wants to see it now every time," he added jokingly.

Last week's meeting was the first time the entire completed set of plans was presented to the planning board, Moore said, though each of the project's plans had been approved separately.

Ordelheide first came before the board in November of 1998. But according to him, the "whole plans were wrong" and he switched architects. Unfortunately, the project kept growing and growing.

"He'd find 10 new things that needed to be fixed for every board he removed," Moore said about the renovation of the inn, which was built in 1704. "Every time he came in the plan looked different than before."

I think it's safe to say he was like Christopher Columbus, not knowing where he was going and ended up not knowing where he was."
— Al Moore, planning board

What started out as a simple renovation of the Red Lion Inn, became a complete gutting of the inn, and the adjoining Lilac House. When finished, the inn will feature a bar and restaurant on its first floor, 15 luxury suites on the second and third floor, a barn-style function hall out back next to a swimming pool, and a jazz club, bakery and bistro in the Lilac House. An enclosed walkway will join the inn and the barn. Ordelheide estimates the entire project will cost between $7 and $8 million. He said at the meeting, the project better be done by November because he already has functions booked for the barn.

"It would've been a lot easier [to tear everything down and start over] but I wanted to keep the character of the place," he said.

Because of the continually evolving plans, the planning board never saw a complete, final set of plans until the Aug. 16 meeting – a fact that bothered some residents in town. But Moore said, though the board may change its policy for future projects, the Red Lion Inn project deserved an exception.

"The applicant [Ordelheide] was very good about not hiding anything. At times we would have liked things on a more timely basis, but in his defense, I think it's safe to say he was like Christopher Columbus, not knowing where he was going and ended up not knowing where he was," he explained. "He was digging into an old building. Before he was through, the plans had changed a great bit."

Moore and the planning board went into last week's meeting expecting to give its final approval to the plans. "The site approval was voted along time ago...In reality, we could've quietly signed [the final plans], but since so much time had passed, we just wanted to officially acknowledge it.

"We weren't there to disapprove anything; he didn't give us anything new. We had it all in writing. [Town engineer John Modelewski] said it was OK, so let's get this thing put to bed," he said.

The meeting was the first for newly hired Town Planner Elizabeth Harrington. Though Harrington does not officially start until Sept. 5, Moore asked her to attend so she could get a jump on issues before the board. Her initial welcome came on the night of the first-ever "toast," which Ordelheide provided.

"Do they do this in Quincy?" Moore asked Harrington who currently works in the city of Quincy's planning office.

"Once in a while," she quickly responded.

"They have six-packs in Quincy," chimed in board member Chris Ford.

Cohasset signs new 'Mayflower Compact'

Town joins with regional planning advisory board

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Ye olde Towne of Conahasset has signed a "Mayflower Compact."

Though this version doesn't establish rules and laws to live by, it does establish guidelines and objectives to help curb the bane of environmental protectionists everywhere — suburban sprawl and the impact poor growth and planning decisions can have on communities.

Selectmen recently voted to approve the "New Mayflower Compact" as a gesture that Cohasset is committed to helping create a regional growth management strategy for the South Shore.

Southeastern Mass: Vision 2020, which is behind the compact, is a task force organized by the region's three planning agencies — the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC), Old Colony Planning Council (OCPC) and the Southeast Regional Planning and Economic Development District (SRPEDD).

"The project is intended to address planning and growth on a region-wide basis," said Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan. "Some impacts have an effect on the whole region."

"Over the next 20 years, the region can expect 10,000 new residents per year. If present land-use practices continue, this growth will change the region."
— Donald Connors, chairman of Southeastern Mass: Vision 2020

The task force, says Marshfield resident Jean Christensen, a consultant with the MAPC, is in the process of visiting the 51 communities under the auspices of the three planning agencies. The agencies, though not official state agencies, are publicly funded. According to Christensen, there are 13 of these agencies in Massachusetts. Originally state run, the agencies are now independent, although they are supported by a small portion of local assessments and state grants.

Closed valve blamed for discoloration

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Contractors installing sewer pipes on Route 3A forgot to reopen a closed water pipe valve at the end of Pond and Spring Street, said water commission chairman John McNabb, resulting in a number of houses in the Pond Street area experiencing discolored water.

McNabb said the valve was originally shut off a few weeks ago when a water pipe on Route 3A had to be moved during sewer pipe installation. However, the contractors neglected to reopen the valve causing water flow to reverse in the pipe.

After a number of discolored water complaints were received at the town's water plant, McNabb said workers "by process of elimination" decided that a valve had been shut off. A worker was dispatched to Pond Street, and discovered the valve had indeed not been reopened.

"The situation should be returning to normal," said McNabb.

Though the shut-off valve might not have actually caused the problem, when the valve was finally opened and water flow reversed again, McNabb thinks sediment from the pipe was pulled off and resulted in the water discoloration.

He said anyone still experiencing discoloration on clothing can pick up a free bottle of "Iron Out" – a product designed to remove rust stains from clothing – at the water treatment plant on King Street.

Final warning on gravel pit use

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Responding to complaints from residents, Town Manager Mark Haddad gave contractors using the town's gravel pit as a staging area for the sewer project a final warning, telling them to abide by town quiet hours or face being kicked out.

The warning came after a number of North Main Street residents called Haddad to complain that contractors were working the in area last Saturday morning at 6:30 a.m.

"The neighbors were very upset," Haddad told selectmen at their meeting Tuesday night. "It's been a tough two years for these people."

The gravel pits are located behind the town Little League field and a number of houses off North Main Street. Contractors working on the town's sewer installation project have been using the site to store dirt, sand and other materials needed during construction.

Haddad reported to selectmen that he informed Dan Coughlin of Tutela Engineering, which is overseeing the project, that no one is to work in the pits on Saturdays, Sundays or holidays, or before 7 a.m.

"I will throw them out if they break [the ban] one more time," said Haddad.

Town meeting approved a bylaw in March establishing town "quiet hours," saying no deliveries can be made in town between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. Use of heavy equipment during those hours is also prohibited, except in the case of a public safety emergency.

The future of the gravel pits remains unknown. One possibility is to fill the pits with earth removed during the middle/high school expansion project. A hill in the rear of the school will be partly removed during the project. Instead of spending upwards of $200,000 to ship the earth off, selectmen threw out the idea of leveling off the gravel pit and creating another athletic field, or parking lot.

Government Island

Selectmen have invited Government Island Study Committee chairman Ham Tewksbury to discuss the future of the committee. This comes on the heels of complaints from the GISC that it is not playing a big enough role in decisions involving Government Island.

The committee made the complaints in a GISC meeting earlier this month and sent a letter to selectmen asking any issue involving the island be sent to the GISC for review.

Selectman Merle Brown said, "I asked [what the committee does] nine years ago and I still don't know what they do."

Selectmen Michael Sullivan then suggested Tewksbury come to a meeting and "see what they have been doing."

Route, 3A/ Sohier St. island

Selectmen agreed to allow Cohasset Plaza owner Don Staszko to maintain the island at the intersection of Route 3A and Sohier Street.

"Just make sure he submits a color and planting chart first," joked board chairman Tom Callahan.

Office closed

Town Manager Mark Haddad reported the selectmen's office will be close don Monday, Aug. 28, in order for the office's new carpet to be installed.

Haddad said the closure is necessary because installers will be moving furniture and phone lines around all day.

The carpet is the next step in the renovation of the office, being paid for by MediaOne. The walls have already been painted a turquoise blue. "It will make the walls make sense," Haddad said about the carpet's new color.

Disabilities committee

Saying the town is still a long way off from being completely handicapped accessible, selectmen voted to bring back the town's disabilities committee.

Interestingly, no one knew the old commission had been disbanded. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was told by Norfolk Road resident Lance Norris that he had been told the committee had disbanded by Francis Andrews, the former committee chairman.

Selectmen decided to name Norris to the committee, and send letters out to the last-known members of the committee to determine if they're still interested in serving.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area on Saturday, Sept. 9 from 7 a.m.-3:30 p.m.. No trees over 12" in diameter, no contractors.

Air noise task force

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris is looking for residents to serve on a task force to examine the increasing amount of air traffic over the area.

"There seems to be a lot more air traffic over the South Shore and we need to take a look at it," she said. Hingham has already created such a task force, and McMorris hopes the two towns can work together on the issue.

The air space over Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate is used as an approach for planes landing at Logan Airport in Boston. Residents interested in serving on the task force should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Village parking woes solved?

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Fears of what an expanded Red Lion Inn might do to the parking situation in Cohasset Village has proved, so far, not to be as bad as expected.

Less than six months after owner Gerde Ordelheide reopened the Red Lion Inn, it has been business as usual in the village, with the exception of some complaints about parking problems at shops on South Main Street.

Management at Tedeschi's convenience store feared that patrons of the inn's restaurant and bar areas would use the prime parking spaces in front of the store, instead of the town parking lot, forcing Tedeschi's customers to park further down the street. At the store's request, the town restricted parking in front of the store to a 15-minute time limit from 6-11 p.m., when the Red Lion Inn reopened last spring.

Signs were also posted inside the Red Lion Inn asking people to park in the town lot.

"I could also put it on the menus and remind people before they order," said Ordelheide jokingly.

However, some patrons of the centuries-old inn are apparently willing to pay the $25 fine for parking in front of Tedeschi's, to avoid making the longer walk from the town lot. Police chief Brian Noonan, acting on complaints, said he issued a memo to his officers reminding them to strictly enforce the parking restriction.

Noonan said if the department does get a complaint from Tedeschi's or any other party complaining about cars parked illegally, an officer will be dispatched to the site, record the license plate numbers, drive off and return 15 minutes later. If the violating car is still there, it is ticketed.

In an Aug. 9 letter to Ordelheide and copied to town officials, Gordon Stevenson of 13 N. Main St., complained about lack of parking and police response.

"At 9:20 p.m., on Tuesday, Aug. 8, I went in to purchase milk and commented that business looked good because all the reserved spaces were full, and was told than none of the cars were their customers," he stated.

Stevenson — who said he was told police had been called but did not respond — said an elderly woman's husband double parked on South Main Street, so she could purchase a gallon of milk.

Noonan didn't deny the incident happened but said police did respond but called away and unable to return before the violators left.

But others say the parking problem in front of the store hasn't been a significant problem. Town Manager Mark Haddad, who is usually the first to know when there is a problem in town, said he hasn't heard any complaints yet.

A manager at Tedeschi's said the 15-minute limit has been working "fairly well."

Ordelheide said at a recent planning board meeting that any left-over parking concerns shouldn't be addressed to him, but instead the town. "I'm not doing anything outside of my rights," he said.

He said he is open to discussing parking concerns with anyone, but pointed out the town parking lot is empty in the evening, the time when his business is the busiest.

Haddad said he thinks the parking situation has improved thanks to the town's public works department restriping the town lot and adding a few spaces there earlier this summer.

Group: Not everyone against Greenbush

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though most newspaper headlines regarding Greenbush scream about lawsuits, tunnels, mitigation demands, and shouts of "not in my backyard," there remains a decidedly less-vocal group of Cohasset residents in favor of restoration of the commuter rail.

"There's quite a lot of people enthusiastic in town about seeing the line restored, but they don't get around to writing letters," Dr. Ed Woods of Jerusalem Road.

Lincoln Bloomfield of Beach Street took that thought on step further. "Personally, I think there is a silent majority [of residents in favor of restoration]."

Woods and Bloomfield are two of the six signers of recent letters sent to selectmen upset with the restoration effort and the way Cohasset has dealt with the MBTA (for the most recent letter, see page 7).

In July, Bloomfield, Woods, Sheila Evans of North Main Street, Polly Logan of Nichols Road, Kathryn Sullivan of Spring Street and Jacqueline Whipple of North Main Street, sent a jointly-signed letter to selectmen expressing their frustration with the restoration process. They specifically referred to a 26-item mitigation list the town voted to send to the MBTA, and said the town should focus on "reasonable desires" such as crossing treatments, horns and fencing protection, but not on things such as new wells, flood control and a new fire station. "If the T would help with them, fine and good, but they shouldn't be subjects for bribery," the letter said.

The letter went on to say "public commuting transport, with a burgeoning population, and horrendous, time-consuming gridlock highways, is not only essential but inevitable."

Bloomfield and Woods say they have been advocating train restoration for over a decade, and are frustrated with the obstructionist attitude in town. "A combination of forces ...has kept us from having service for a decade now," said Bloomfield. He said "every city in the civilized world" has train service. Bloomfield, a former employee for the U.S. State Department, said while he lived in Europe, he was in places where trains went by every half hour and "no one paid attention to them."

Woods said he took the train up from Kingston a couple of years ago and was "just delighted in the comfort and ease and on-timeness" of the train. He supports the train because of the relief it would grant commuters or anyone else frustrated at the highway's constant gridlock and the lack of cheap, available parking in Boston. "There is no question the train's benefits outweigh the negatives," he said.

> "There is no question the train's benefits outweigh the negatives."
> — Dr. Ed Woods

Both Woods and Bloomfield are convinced there is a great amount pro-restoration residents in town.

"About two years ago, 98 percent of the merchants in this town signed a petition supporting a downtown train station, and a whole group of people had another petition with several hundred people in support for the train and a downtown station," said Bloomfield.

A non-binding resolution at a special town meeting in 1994 gave the anti-train side a 52/48 percent margin.

Though neither Bloomfield nor Woods live adjacent to the tracks, Sullivan does. Her Spring Street home is less than 50 feet from where the commuter train would come zipping by. The 87-year old has lived there for more than 50 years and remembers when the old Greenbush train used to rumble down the tracks. "The train never did me any harm, is the way I feel about it, " she said, though she doubts she will be around when the train finally does come to Cohasset. "I think they [the MBTA] has had the worst time."

The group was invited to appear before selectmen in order to discuss their thoughts further, but the group sent another letter instead. It said the group has contacted the MBTA and felt "one receives a very different impression of the mitigation process than that presented in the press." Regarding the 26-item mitigation list, the group felt "the MBTA appears from the correspondence to be quite reasonable, accommodating and fair...

"Instead of bashing the MBTA, let's get on with reasonable mitigation...the mitigation committee's overreaction seems to have made us all forget that the MBTA plans to provide Cohasset with urgently needed public transportation to Boston...at no additional cost to Cohasset taxpayers," the letter said.

Woods said the group sent the letter in lieu of appearing before the board because he felt "the composition of the letter would suffice our thoughts," rather than "taking up the selectmen's time."

For Bloomfield, the memories of the last time he appeared before selectmen to discuss Greenbush in 1998 might have influenced his decision to send a letter. He jokingly compared it to when he used to meet with Soviet officials in Moscow during the Cold War, with "very hostile people not wanting to hear what I had to say...It was not one of my favorite events."

The meeting he referred to was the 1998 selectmen's meeting that debated the location of the Cohasset train station.

AROUND TOWN

GREETINGS!

Hello Everyone. I cannot believe it but school is only two weeks away! Time to start back on earlier bedtimes to get everyone geared up for school mornings. Hopefully, the last few weeks will be warm and enjoyable for us. We don't have a lot of news to report this week, make sure to send in any that you may have to me.

SCHOOL DAYS

Parents, the opening day of school for the Town of Cohasset is Wednesday, Sept. 6. Please make sure to read all information that will be mailed to you prior to this date.

CALLING ALL ANIMALS!

Calling all animals! Make sure to give your owners a wake-up call and get ready for the First Annual Pet Parade sponsored by the Cohasset Community Center Nursery School. The date of this event is Saturday, Sept. 9 at 1 p.m. on the Town Common. The cost is $10 per participant and the monies raised will benefit the South Shore Community Center Nursery School's playground refurbishment.

SCOUT NEWS

Scout News and Registration! Town-wide Boy Scout and Girl Scout registrations will be held at the Deer Hill School Cafe on Tuesday, Sept 12 from 6:30-8 p.m.. Boy Scout registration includes all boys interested in joining Tiger Cubs (First Grade), Cub Scouts (second-fifth grade) and Boy Scouts, 6th grade and up. If you have any questions, please call Jane Long for Tiger Cubs, 383-1281 and Linda Farrag for Cub Scouts, 383-9519. Girls may join Daisies,(Kindergarten), Brownies, (first - third grades), Juniors, (fourth - sixth grades), Cadettes, (seventh - ninth grades) and Seniors, 10th-12th grades. Registration Fees are $7 and all forms require a parents signature is required on all forms.

JIMMY FUND WALK

Another reminder about the Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk. This walk is being held on Sept. 24 and is hoping to reach it's goal for 8,000 walkers to raise more than $3.3 million through the one day event. All Cohasset and Hingham residents are encouraged to join in this very important walk. Last year, 56 residents from both towns walked from Hopkinton to Boston in the 11th Annual Walk. Cohasset residents were: Kim Canney, Carlie Carter, Jenny Chastain, Megan Chastain, Mary-Ann Digan, Linda Fechter, Cara Foley, Barbara Froio, Katherine Grimm, Joseph McGlinchey, Maggie O'Neil, Alicia Rawson, Laneve Savola, Kristin Sheerin and Kyle Weber. Let's make the list bigger and join in the fight. Individual walkers qualify to participate in the Walk by raising $100, all walkers are being asked to "go the extra mile" and become a PaceSetter which is a walker who raises $500 or more. PaceSetters receive special recognition at the finish line, will receive a special club T-Shirt and will be invited to a reception held in their honor in the spring. Walkers may choose to walk a half marathon, (13.1 miles) that begins at Wellesley High School or they can join Jimmy Fund Clinic patients and their families in the 3 mile Patient/Family Walk that starts at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. The 12th Annual Jimmy Fund Walk begins in Hopkinton at 7 am, in Wellesley at 11 am and at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute at 2 pm. All walkers finish at Copley Square where they will be met with music, food and a post-walk program featuring speakers from Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. If you need any information about the walk, please call 1-800-632-3562 or visit www.jimmyfund.org.

RELAY SUCCESS!

Congratulations to Cohasset! The annual Relay For Life raised more than $105,000 for the American Cancer Society's fight against cancer — and the money is still coming in! With 34 teams and more than 600 walkers participating here are the ones that finished on top! Highest-fundraising team is Holly's Team ($6,267); highest individual fund-raiser is Cohasset's own Jeff Garber ($4,072); and Most team spirit is Team Scituate. Thanks again go to local sponsors. Gold sponsors are Atlantica, The Red Lion Inn, The Red Parrot and the Cohasset Mariner. Bronze sponsors include the Cohasset Rotary and Pilgrim Cooperative Bank. Congratulations all! Mark you calendars because next year's relay is tentatively scheduled for May 18 & 19.

SCITUATE IMAGES

Interested in some spectacular images from the past of our neighboring town to the south? Then be sure to attend a book signing of "Images of America: Scituate" from 1-4 p.m. Aug. 27 at the Scituate Lighthouse on Cedar Point where David Ball, Fred Freitas, John Galluzzo and Carol Miles will be on hand to sign copies of their new book. As an added bonus the lighthouse will be open for tours, and visitors who purchase a book that day will be admitted free for the tour of the lighthouse and keeper's quarters. All proceeds from the sale of the book will go to local historic preservation projects. In case of rain, the event will be moved to the Scituate Maritime and Irish Mossing Museum on the Driftway. For more information call 545-1083.

GARAGE DANCE

Youth Resources will hold an end-of-summer dance for grades six-eight at The Garage, from 7-10 p.m. Friday. Admission is $5. Summer hours at The Garage will continue until Monday, Aug. 28. The Garage will not be open Wednesday, Aug. 30 and will reopen, Friday Sept. 1. Fall hours will begin Friday, Sept. 8 from 6:30-10:30 p.m. and Saturdays from 5-10 p.m., starting Saturday, Sept. 9. Stay tuned for the full fall schedule that will be available next week!

Don't let another week go by without sharing your good news with Around Town! The quickest way to reach me is by e-mail at jenpiep@yahoo.com. Items can also be sent by snail mail to Jennifer Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Highway or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. — Jennifer Piepenbrink

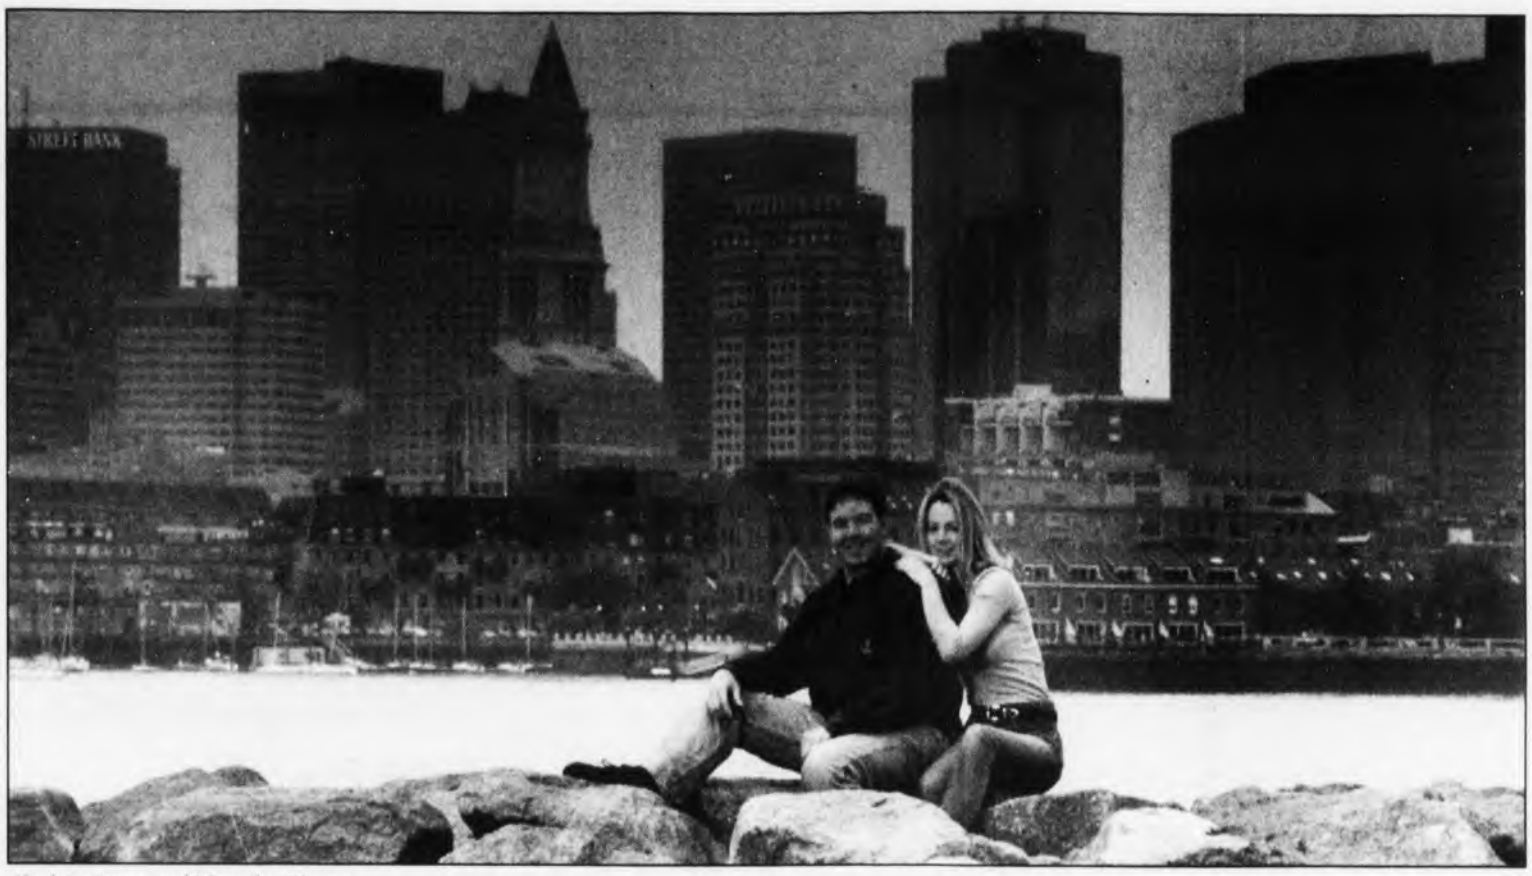
WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS



Hugh A. Carney and Maryellen Maurer

Maurer-Carney engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Louis H. Maurer of Cohasset announce the engagement of their daughter, Maryellen, to Hugh A. Carney, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh A. Carney of Canton. They were engaged on Sept. 27, 1999, in Baden-Baden, Germany.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of Cohasset High School, Fairfield University and the University of Texas at Austin Graduate School of Business. She is employed as an assistant compliance officer with John Hancock Financial Services in Boston. She was formerly employed with the U.S Securities & Exchange Commission in Boston and Fort Worth, Texas.

Her fiancé is a graduate of Xaverian Brothers High School, Stonehill College and Boston University. He is employed as a software application developer with State Street Corporation in Westwood.

A September 2000 wedding is planned.

IT'S HAPPENING

Consignment Shop

Community Newspapers' readers' number one choice for buying and selling will be open for fall/winter sales and consignments, manager Andi Merrill of Scituate announced.

Cohasset Consignment shop, at Tedeschi Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset will accept consignments Monday through Friday 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and be open for sales Monday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday noon to 4 p.m.

President of TGE Social Service League, Motoko Dean of Cohasset said the proceeds from the shop provide the major funding for myriad services the League provides for Norwell, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset. To volunteer call 383-0687.

Celtic and classical at Glastonbury Abbey

Hingham Symphony presents the first of its "Connecting the Arts" series on Saturday, Aug. 26 at 4:30 p.m., on the lawn at Glastonbury Abbey, featuring an enchanting combination of classical and Celtic music. Seamus Connolly, who won the Dash National Fiddle Championship an unprecedented ten times, will be joined by fiddler Laurel Martin, to present traditional and rousing arrangements of Irish slow airs, reels, and set dances, as well as some of Ireland's most revered classical compositions. Connolly is director of the Irish Studies Program at Boston College, and he and Martin teach traditional Irish fiddle together at Boston College. Hingham Symphony musicians, oboist Andrew Price, soprano Karyl Ryczek and pianist Wayman Chin, will perform a selection of classical and popular music, including half of Copland's song cycle, "Twelve Poems by Emily Dickinson." Bring your own blanket or beach chair; light refreshments will be available. Tickets ($10 adults, $5 age 18 and under) are available at Hingham Public Library, the Abbey Bookstore, at the gate, or by calling 740-5694. Glastonbury Abbey is located on Rte 228, just north of Rte 3A. In case of rain, the concert will be held at the Greek Orthodox Church, 811 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset.

Political substance

When the curtain came down on the Democratic National Convention last week, so did the political theater enjoyed by both presidential candidates in the early goings of the campaign. Now, the real fight begins.

The conventions tell us very little about the candidates. They are scripted, choreographed and rehearsed to maximize the much ballyhooed "convention bump" in the polls that often accompanies the event, and candidates use the commanding four days of dominance on the national stage to define themselves — and their opponents — to a country that is largely tuning into the political season for the first time.

Theater is everything. Substance is secondary.

Texas Gov. George W. Bush made the most of his opportunity at the Republican National Convention by bridging the gap between traditional conservatives and the new, more centrist wing of the GOP. Likewise Vice President Al Gore, who deftly crafted a message last week that drew on traditional Democratic ideals while putting forth an agenda not mired in the far left.

So far, the scripts have played out as expected: Although Bush led in all national polls for most of the campaign, Gore closed the gap after the convention.

But like any good show, it must come to an end. The conventions give way to a campaign that promises to be a furious, bare-knuckle battle that will surely "get ugly," in the words of one political analyst.

Fueled by $67.6 million in federal election dollars and energized by their enthusiastic parties, Bush and Gore now face perhaps the biggest challenge of the campaign — the presidential debates — where voters will get the closest thing to an unfiltered view of both candidates. The first one, co-sponsored by Community Newspaper Company, parent of the Cohasset Mariner, is scheduled for Oct. 3 at UMass-Boston, with two others scheduled for Oct. 11 in Winston-Salem, N.C. and Oct. 17 in St. Louis.

These forums will provide a true test. For the first time both candidates will step away from their handlers and political consultants to speak for themselves. And while their platforms will be pre-written and carefully rehearsed, the debates will offer a forum in which the candidates must also think on their feet — and it will be in those moments that voters will hear what is in their hearts and in their heads. The campaign can be won or lost in those few moments.

The more academic Gore will likely have an edge in the debates. Surely this is why Bush has balked at scheduling and format for the debates.

Meanwhile, the candidates have begun the final two months of tough campaigning. Gore plans to highlight his biography, and attack Bush's record in Texas and on issues such as abortion, guns and education. Bush is expected to continue his values pitch, alluding to the Clinton era by promising integrity and decency in Washington. Voters should be prepared for a barrage of TV, radio and print attack ads.

But even if it turns negative, we have entered the far more substantive portion of the campaign. It is a crucial juncture, as the sizable undecided voter block — which, more than is most presidential elections, promises to be the swing vote — will now have an opportunity for informed deliberation.

We are happy to see the conventions concluded and welcome a closer examination of those who would lead us into the 21st century. And we especially look forward to the debates in Boston and elsewhere, where Bush and Gore will come out from behind the curtain of political script. The theater has ended. Let's get ready to rumble.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Soul of Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I am a former resident of Cohasset, frequently visit my family, who have resided in town for 34 years, and hope to move back someday. On my most recent visit in July, I became familiar with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, through the articles in the Mariner and conversations with my family members. I have very strong emotional ties to my hometown — it was a wonderful place to grow up — for children to feel safe, walking and riding bikes around downtown, to the harbor — it was a small town where everyone knew everyone. Traffic, congestion, and "cookie cutter" housing developments where nowhere to be found. I have seen in my own community outside of Philadelphia in recent years the price of progress — many times, as I sit in long lines of traffic at lights do I moan to my children, "If we lived in Cohasset right now, we wouldn't have this traffic."

Cohasset is an unique community and I suggest the town cast a wary eye on the goals of the CRC. It's all well and good to spruce up the town, repaint and fix a dock here and there, but what Cohasset doesn't need is change —especially change that will basically benefit a couple of business owners. Our streets are not designed to accommodate throngs of tourists and we don't need boutiques to line the town center and Elm Street. As the old expression goes, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it" After living coast to coast in the last 25 years, I remain convinced Cohasset is one of the prettiest towns in the country and current residents are lucky to live there. One of my high school classmates, at our 25th reunion two years ago, lamented that when we were growing up, the town was united and the son of the fisherman could socialize with the son of an Atlantic Avenue homeowner — each would be equally welcome in each other's homes. Could the same be said today? I challenge the residents, especially the newcomers, to look into the soul of Cohasset, cherish what's there and don't let the CRC do something you may later regret.

Commuter boat parking proposal

TO THE EDITOR:

At the Aug. 16 Hingham Planning Board to review the Sea Chain plans for the Hingham shipyard development, representatives from Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA) suggested that a larger parking facility in the form of a multi-level parking facility be included in the plan.

The developers said they were powerless to act on this proposal and that it was up to the MBTA to develop such a facility.

Given the link between MBTA controlled water transportation and Greenbush rail, it seems highly unlikely that the MBTA will do anything of the sort. Additional parking at the Hingham shipyard in the form of an expanded facility could well take more cars off the roads during peak hours than Greenbush0s projected 1331 cars. The net result is that water transportation, a natural resource unique to the South Shore, with tremendous potential for removing cars from the highways, has been put on the back burner and may remain there forever. Commuter boats are fast becoming a victim of the South Shore public transportation controversy, rather than part of the solution.

In its efforts to bolster Greenbush, the MBTA has painted a greatly distorted picture of water transportation possibilities. For example, in testimony at the Army Corps of Engineers hearings on Greenbush:

The MBTA admitted its ridership projections for the Hingham ferry were wrong, but it was nevertheless committed to its model. The Hingham ferry currently carries double the estimated riders projected in MBTA Greenbush studies for the year 2010.

The T refused to incorporate the possibility of ferry service from the Weymouth/Quincy area from the beginning of its analyses, saying that there were no available sites for a ferry terminal along 3A. When Harbor Express came into existence providing service at Quincy Fore River, the T dismissed this service as not serving the Greenbush corridor, even though 75 percent of Harbor Express' ridership comes from Weymouth,Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

In a problematic and super-expensive "superboat" proposal, the T claimed a ferry service for Scituate would cost $80 million, and discounted it as unreasonable, and said that Scituate would not have space to support such a service. Scituate, meanwhile, had determined that a two-boat service would cost somewhere in the vicinity of $6 million and continues to seek ways to implement the service.

Erroneous and misleading conclusions such as these drawn by the MBTA and its consultants are to be found throughout its alternatives analyses presented to the ACOE.

What is taking place here seems to be a gross miscarriage of a process that is intended to provide the best public transportation for the citizens of the Commonwealth

It is AfTA's goal to right this wrong and insist that water transportation, among other alternatives, be given full review and hopefully be given the opportunity to realize its full potential. To do this we need the support of all South Shore residents who believe water transportation should not be held hostage by the MBTA's position on Greenbush.

Residents should insist that the Hingham Planning Board not approve any plan for the shipyard that does not include at least a double deck parking facility containing at least 3200 parking spaces dedicated to commuter boat riders. While we realize it is not in the Planning Board's power to build such a facility, we believe they should make every effort to leverage the MBTA to do so. At present, the lot has 1600 free spaces with an additional 200 paid spaces. The new plan includes 1700 spaces. However 200 will go to Harbor Island visitors, 35 to the Department of Environmental Management and the 200 paid spaces will presumably be eliminated, for a net loss of 350 spaces for boat riders. (Boat operators have asked for 3200 spaces to meet potential demand.) Those who support this effort can e-mail their comments to afta@channel1.com . E-mails will be submitted to the Planning Board.

Plaque added to Phineas Pratt memorial

By Joel S. Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In Cohasset's Central Cemetery is a memorial to Phineas Pratt and his descendants. Phineas never lived in Cohasset. He died in 1680 in Charlestown, Mass. and is buried there. However his seventh and youngest son, Aaron and his great-grandson, Thomas, are also mentioned on the stone: both lived in Cohasset. The old legend on the stone has worn so far that it cannot be read. It charged Pratts of future generations to "erect another more durable" when the original "has crumbled to dust." Thanks to contributions from descendants of Phineas, a bronze plate has been cast which is certainly more durable than the original marble. The original legend, with corrections, is on the plate plus a note about it replacing the original. The old, worn engraving will still be visible as the new plate will be affixed on the backside of the stone. Here is what it says:

This stone erected to the memory of the Pratt family by their descendants.

Phineas Pratt came over from England with the Weston Colony in 1622 and first settled at Weymouth. The Indians threatening to destroy the colonies, he traveled in the then wilderness with the Indians following to destroy him. After three days, he arrived at Plymouth and gave information to the governor, and by the blessing of God the colony was saved.

He died at Charlestown April 19, 1684, aged 90 years, and has a tombstone yet to be seen. One of his sons, Aaron, settled in this place, and died in 1735 aged 81 years. Aaron his son died 1767 aged 77 years. Thomas, son of Aaron 2 died 1818, aged 85 years. Sarah his wife died 1808, aged 62 years.

It is hoped and believed that their memory will be handed down to the latest generations and when this stone has crumbled to dust, that our descendants will erect another more durable.

Time and weather having erased the inscription on the reverse of this stone, the descendants of Phineas Pratt have placed here this more durable legend, as the original charged us to do.

Underlines mark corrections to the original text.

Phineas was not the only Pratt to come to America; however, he was the first. He came on the Ship Sparrow in 1622. The Sparrow had been financed by a London merchant, Mr. Weston. Weston's plan was to start the second colony in America. While the Sparrow lay at islands off the Maine coast, Phineas and his companions came to Plymouth in a small boat. Later, the adventurers landed in what is now Weymouth and started to build the Wessagussett colony. It lay on the shores of what we know as the Fore River, between Weymouth and Quincy. Within the last year, the voters of Weymouth appropriated money to buy a few acres of the original site so that there might be a permanent memorial.

Glenn Pratt holds the plaque that is being installed on the marble Pratt monument in Cohasset Central Cemetery.

Phineas lived there briefly then moved to Plymouth. Here he married Mayflower descendant Mary Priest. Mary had not come on the Mayflower but her father Degory Priest had. Degory died in the first winter at Plymouth as did many of the colonists. Their son Joseph was born in Plymouth in 1645. He married Dorcas Folger. Her sister, Abiah, married Joseph Franklin and they had a son, Benjamin. Yes, that Benjamin Franklin.

By 1649, when their son Aaron was born, Mary and Phineas lived in Charlestown, Mass. Here he died in 1680 at age 90. He married Sarah Pratt, granddaughter of Matthew (Macuth) Pratt. Matthew had settled in Weymouth late in the 1620 and was the progenitor of another large clan of Pratts.

Aaron and Sarah started a long line of Cohasset Pratts. They had five children. Upon Sarah's death, Aaron married another Sarah, Sarah Wright with whom he had three more children. To this day there are Pratts living in Cohasset who can truthfully say that every generation of their Pratt male ancestors was born, lived, worked and died in Cohasset. These are Peter, Glenn and Bruce Pratt and Bruce's sister, Alison. Glenn's father, Edwin, has just returned to Cohasset after a 20 year "retirement" in Florida. There are many others in Cohasset, Bates, Lincolns, Towers, Frasers, Marshs and Stoddards whose Pratt forebears have been Cohasseters in an unbroken line from Aaron. Although my father spent 77 of his 78 years in Cohasset, he was born in Brookline. And I moved away many years ago and cannot make the same claim.

The dedication of the memorial will take place at 11 a.m. on September 4. It will be followed by a bring-your-own picnic for Pratt descendants.

Please call me (207) 255-4740 or Glenn Pratt (781) 383-0048 with any questions you may have.

Dogfish is no longer humble

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It's been close to 20 years now since I fished off Minot's Light with Jack Calderwood, the mild-mannered Scituate advertising man. Mild-mannered? Ha!

Actually, it's not surprising that, in the last two decades, the once despised dogfish has scrambled up the social ladder to a point where he is even welcome at dinner tables in Cohasset or Duxbury.

I remember the day particularly because the first fish we caught was a dogfish and the mere sight of it turned Jack into a raging piscatorial maniac.

Muttering four-letter Anglo-Saxon functional verbs, he grabbed the squirming dogfish by the tail and battered it with a club until it was unrecognizable even as a fish.

Then, with the triumphant look of a man who had just rid the world of AIDS, ebola and the Republican party, he calmly tossed the carcass overboard and dusted his hands in recognition of a job well done.

That's the way we treated dogfish — "trash" fish, we called them — 20 years ago.

You can imagine my surprise the other day when I read that a federal judge has had to set a limit on how many dogfish you can catch.

And, furthermore, the men and women who catch fish for a living in Massachusetts are mad as blazes and they're not going to take it anymore. There's even talk of ignoring the federal mandate.

Obviously, I must have missed something somewhere.

Commercial fishermen in our state caught 49 million pounds of dogfish in 1998, twice as much as cod and eight times as much as haddock.

That presumes that somewhere, someone is eating them although it's hard to imagine sautéed dogfish, sprinkled with a parsley garnish and a wedge of lemon on the side served up at the Barker Tavern.

That noise you hear is the late Jack Calderwood, rest his soul, the mighty executioner of dogfish, rolling over in his grave.

Actually, it's not surprising that, in the last two decades, the once despised dogfish has scrambled up the social ladder to a point where he is even welcome at dinner tables in Cohasset or Duxbury.

The whole Atlantic Ocean has been pretty well fished out of cod. I'm told that boy and girl haddock have a tough time finding each other for purposes of reproduction in the ocean depths. Monkfish is becoming a familiar sight on some menus.

Meanwhile, fish and chips are still as popular as tea and crumpets in Merry Olde England, so popular that they don't take time to identify the fish by name.

The Japanese, of course, will eat anything that can prove it once swam in saltwater and, most of the time, they can't even wait to cook it.

Can skate be far behind? Friends who have tried it tell me it tastes something like lobster. Which reminds me .

Did you know that, around the time the Pilgrims were scrounging for food, the lobster was regarded as a trash fish, fit only to be slopped to the hogs.

Now, to order some in a restaurant, you have to negotiate the price with the chef and then head for the nearest ATM.

LIBRARY CORNER

Brand-new for fall

Paul Pratt Memorial Library is calling all Harry Potter fans to discuss their opinions and views of the Harry Potter series books by J. K. Rowling in a library book group that will begin this fall.

Heading up this endeavor are two of Harry's biggest fans, Cohasset's talented artist and storyteller, Michael Astley and his young sister Emma. The program, "The Wonderful World of Harry Potter & Beyond," is promised to be an event-filled program of exploration throughout the year. Part of the program will involve creating and maintaining a web site and practicing journalism skills through a column in local newspapers. The specifics of the program will be determined prior to the school year and announced very soon.

This program is offered for all school children entering the third and fourth grades in the fall of 2000 and will require a nominal fee. For more information, please call Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, at 383-1348.

Project vote smart

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library announces the availability of written and video resources for voters who need help deciding this year's election. "Project Vote Smart," whose founding volunteer members include former vice-presidents, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter and other political figures such as former U.S. Senators Barry Goldwater and George McGovern, is a comprehensive source for information on candidates and issues.

Students, volunteers and members consider its "single most issue to preserve and protect our right to self-govern in the face of campaigns, parties and special interests."

The Paul Pratt Library will provide voters with three resources: "Voter's Self-defense Manual" with access to voting records, campaign finances and voting records, "Internship Brochure," volunteer information for those willing to work in a setting at the project's Great Divide Ranch; and an "Informational Video," an entertaining story about Project Vote Smart, what they are and how to use the programs.

For more information, call the Paul Pratt Library at 383-1348.

Local author Betty Taymor has written Running Against the Wind: The Struggle of Women in Massachusetts Politics. NNF 320 TAY

This lively memoir by local political figure Betty Taymor recalls her terms as an eight-time delegate to the Democratic National Committee and her work on the campaign trail for candidates at the local, state, and national levels. During her years in the political arena and as an educator of women for government service, Taymor came into contact with many public leaders, and her memoir is populated with such figures as John F. Kennedy, Edward M. Kennedy, Eleanor Roosevelt, Adlai Stevenson, Eugene McCarthy, Robert Drinan, Tip O'Neill, Michael Dukakis and Evelyn Murphy. Rich with colorful anecdotes, "Running Against the Wind" provides an insider's view of the political culture in Massachusetts and offers a provocative look at the special problems and challenges facing women candidates.

This trio of new novels will interest readers looking for quality fiction by women:

"Wild Life" by Molly Gloss is presented as the 1905 journal of a self-avowed feminist who gets lost in the wilderness. "The writing is gorgeous, the characters real and vivid, and the story transforming." New Fiction GLOSS

"An Invisible Sign of My Own" by Aimee Bender tells the story of an unusual woman who longs for safety from life's anguish and disasters and finds refuge in the security of immutable world of numbers. New Fiction BEN

"After Life" by Rhian Ellis is a novel of psychological suspense staring a mother-daughter team of practicing mediums. The story begins: "First, I had to get his body into the boat." New Fiction ELLIS

Runway expansion

TO THE EDITOR:

The reply of MassPort's Noise and Abatement Supervisor, Nancy Timmerman, to your reporter, Carol Meyer, that increased jet traffic over the South Shore, is due to southwest winds was disingenuous. Increased jet traffic has very little to do with wind direction, and everything to do with airline deregulation, which has significantly increased air traffic in most communities since it was enacted. Things will only get worse. If the new runway is built (14/32), jet arrival traffic over the South Shore will increase from 28,000 to 98,000 annually by 2010 — an environmental noise disaster equivalent to the sinking of the Exxon Valdez — except that the noise pollution will be permanent — not amenable to clean up procedures.

In denying that the South Shore has been targeted for increased traffic, John Silva of the FAA reveals his ignorance of his own directive. I call his attention to BOS TWR 7040.1F, dated 11/17/98, Appendix 1, Paragraph 1, which requires the use of runway 33L for all arrivals between midnight and 6 a.m., forcing traffic to fly over Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull.

We will experience a "double whammy" on the South Shore. Departing flights are already vectored over our area to the west with their engines screaming to gain altitude after flying to the east of the Hull peninsula, while runway 14/32 landings will quadruple arrival traffic.

The net result — untenable noise pollution levels on the South Shore which already bears the brunt of aircraft noise for the greater Boston region (we receive 70 percent of the total, even though we have only 20 percent of the population).

Leading the charge to turn the South Shore into a polluted swamp of continuous noise is Richard Eagan, CEO of EMC, Governor Paul Celluci, and Lt. Governor Swift. Eagan has businesses in Boston hoodwinked into supporting 14/32, as a majority of corporate executives live to the north and west of Boston — which are unaffected by air traffic. In many greater Boston communities 14/32 is a non issue — and "good for business."

Concerned citizens on the South Shore, as well as in Boston, are working on a political solution to this crisis, which must include a regional transportation plan to include greater use of airports such as Providence, Worcester and Manchester to serve the 60 percent of Logan's customers living in the 128/495 corridor.

None of us like to contemplate legal action, particularly when recourse through the courts has been made particularly difficult with respect to aviation matters, which are controlled by the Federal Government. The Environmental Protection Agency, which has long recommended against 14/32, has been turned into a toothless tiger, with no power to affect outcomes.

We citizens do have the right to quiet enjoyment of our property, which is already being denied us. It is difficult to enforce a Logan curfew, or require the FAA to change its flight patterns. Only Congressional action can do that (we are pleased to have Senators Kennedy and Kerry's attention as we continue to investigate these matters). If political action fails, and we are unable to stop 14/32, change arrival and departure flight patterns, and require a Logan curfew, a class action suit against MassPort, and the airlines — similar to citizen action against the tobacco companies — becomes our only recourse.

I am pleased by the response of the selectmen in Hingham, Hull and now Cohasset to this looming crisis. Hopefully, by joining hands with the citizens of East Boston, Winthrop and the South End (all members of CARE — Citizens against Runway Expansion), through political action we can stop the insanity of 14/32, and turn our attention to developing a regional transportation plan to benefit all citizens of Massachusetts.

BOARD OF SELECTMEN

Thank you for the courtesy of an invitation to meet with you on Aug. 22. Rather than intrude on your busy schedule, however, we would like to simply forward a few thoughts which we hope you will consider regarding Cohasset's mitigation proceedings with the MBTA.

By law, of course, the MBTA must limit its mitigation to items and areas that have a relationship to the project. In our own correspondence with the MBTA, in which the MBTA has shared its correspondence with Cohasset's Mitigation Committee on June 12 and June 15, one receives a very different impression of the mitigation process than that presented in the press.

We believe you, as well as we, are concerned that so much cynicism and contentiousness appears to pervade the Cohasset/MBTA relationship. Of Cohasset's 26 items for which the town seeks mitigation, the MBTA appears from the correspondence to be quite reasonable, accommodating and fair. We believe if you shared this list and the current status of each item with the public, a more constructive atmosphere might prevail.

We hope you will also instruct the Mitigation Committee to seriously heed the good experiences with the MBTA some of the town managers on the Plymouth and Middleborough lines reported to Mark Haddad. It seems that these lines are so popular that sufficient parking is the current problem.

Instead of bashing the MBTA, let's get on with reasonable mitigation and, of course, let's obtain remediation for items really adversely affected by the train. The Mitigation Committee's overreaction seems to have made us all forget that the MBTA plans to provide Cohasset with urgently needed public transportation to Boston and the towns along the way—at no additional cost to Cohasset taxpayers.

New seven-home subdivision is slated off Beechwood Street

The westerly driveway will lead up to lots two, three, four and five, before ending. The easterly road will turn out towards lots six and seven.

The houses will be on septic systems, though the amount needed for the entire subdivision has not yet been determined. Murphy hopes that lots one through five can be hooked up to a common system, but that would require a pipe running from lot one to an area several hundred feet away near the other four houses.

Moore said the project looks promising because of its spaciousness, with seven houses being spread over 40 acres, including 19 acres of undeveloped land. "My experience is usually with applicants trying to wring more out of the land than the land can give," he said. "In this case...overbuilding the site is barely one of the issues."

He expects the board to focus mainly on the proposal's engineering and environmental aspects at its Sept. 6 meeting.

Murphy did request seven waivers for the project — some were granted and others modified.

A waiver to not include all trees that are12 inches or thicker in diameter on the plans was one that was modified. Murphy said his company would be at the site "for a month and a half" marking the required trees. Moore said this requirement was one of his "favorites," but added only trees greater than 12 inches in diameter to be cut down, would have to be indicated. The mass removal of trees at the Rose Hill development off Route 3A a few years ago stimulated the board's interest in identifying what is to be cut down. At Rose Hill, a number of trees were required to be removed in order to install the subdivision's septic system, resulting in what one board member called the "denuding" of the subdivision. "I just want to make sure nothing of any good size needs to be sacrificed," Moore said regarding the Beechwood property. Wheelwright said the land was "all field until 40 or 50 years ago" and he didn't expect to find much old growth (large trees) on the land.

After a long discussion, the board approved the request for a waiver on road width. Normal guidelines require 24-foot-wide roads on subdivisions with seven lots, but the board agreed to a 20-foot-wide road with a 1-1/2 foot wide Cape Cod style berm – or sloped pavement on the edge of the road – on each side. The one-foot difference between the requirement and the proposal was close enough for the board. Member William Good preferred it saying he likes a narrower road unlike the "thoroughfare feel" on Fairoaks Lane.

The subdivision's 650-foot westerly common driveway was approved. Regulations usually limit common driveways at 500 feet. But because the end of Ox Pasture Lane is so far away from the northern-most lot, the development would need four long, narrow private driveways if the common driveway ended at 500 feet.

The board waived the required cul-de-sac turnaround on the easterly common driveway, in favor of a "hammerhead" turnaround. Instead of being shaped like a circle, the road will have a widened mouth, so when viewed from above, it looks like a hammer's head. The waiver was granted with Cohasset fire chief Roger Lincoln's approval.

The development will contain no sidewalks, at the request of Wheelwright. But the waiver came with a guarantee that a paved easement would be provided for children waiting for the school bus near Ox Pasture Lane's intersection with Beechwood Street. And instead of the lane's entrance having a 30-foot wide radius, as usually required, the road will flare out at the ends, in order to allow cars to pull in and out of the road safely.

Wheelwright was denied relief of a 40-foot required easement for the westerly common driveway. He claimed the conservation commission's required wetlands setback when combined with the planning board's required easement, would place the common driveway too close to lot two. In its denial, the board said a waiver would be considered for specific sections of the common driveway, if the required setbacks become a problem.

With waivers dealt with, Moore expects the board to begin addressing concerns they have with the project's final plans at its next meeting.. "There were some incomplete drawings because of the waivers. I'm sure Mr. Murphy will have those completed [by the next meeting] and we can go through the regular checklist...I don't think it will take too long. [The proposal] is not a tough one."

The proposal has already received conservation commission approval, providing certain concerns are addressed. Among the changes required by the commission were the creation of concrete drainage pipes for the westerly road's two wetlands crossings.

Cohasset signs new 'Mayflower Compact' to protect region

The agencies' purpose is to give communities guidance on efficient planning and development strategies, such as creating master plans.

Vision 2020, according to Christensen, is an attempt to focus on planning and development issues unique to Southeastern Massachusetts. Though some communities have so far been immune to the sprawl experienced by other towns, she hopes the group can bring awareness to the problems that arise from it, such as an increased demand for town services, traffic problems and other quality-of-life issues.

"Over the next 20 years, the region can expect 10,000 new residents per year," warns Donald Connors, chairman of the task force, in a letter to communities. "If present land-use practices continue, this growth will change the region. The region's unique character, economic vitality and quality of life will be lost to 'sprawl development'..."

The task force characterizes sprawl as:

low-density, homogeneous developing that separates uses and limits choices abandonment of existing infrastructure and other usable buildings job centers inaccessible to an urban workforce large lot subdivisions, commercial strips and shopping malls that force dependence on cars

redundant infrastructure

"We should avoid sprawl, keep development where there is infrastructure to support it, while maintaining different landscapes and different kinds of communities," said Christensen. During both her presentation to selectmen and in a later interview, she stressed the need for more efficient planning and zoning. She mentioned strip malls with large parking lots forcing people to drive from store to store, and the tendency to clear cut land and then "plop" a house in the middle of the property. She said office parks should be kept near each other, close to highways, rather than in the middle of farmland, eating up more land.

"Years ago, planners made a lot of mistakes," she said. "They strip zoned lots of land. Once they do that, it is very hard to change back...Zoning does plan what kind of development happens in a community.

"We have way, way overzoned commercial and industrial land, way over what will ever be developed," she said.

The "New Mayflower Compact" aims to establish a future with:

cities as civic and cultural centers towns that are physically distinct and retain individual character rural areas that remain rural, with farms, forests or open space

a natural, restored and protected environment efficient infrastructure that supports local and regional needs

The task force's goal is to get the region's communities to sign the compact — essentially a letter of agreement — and "voluntarily join together to implement a growth-management program that preserves the interests of each town and city, yet profits from unified regional actions."

Among its goals are to promote growth in areas with existing and/or underutilized infrastructure; provide communities with tools and technical and financial assistance in planning their long-term growth strategies; reform state laws to discourage sprawl and promote regional cooperation; analyze the full-range of impacts associated with local zoning decisions; promote the sharing of benefits and impacts of development among communities; and preserve natural resources and regional water supplies.

Callahan used the fictional example of a mall being built along Route 3A. "One of the goals is to try to get the regional impact considered [such as traffic effects in Hingham], not just the Cohasset impact," he said. Real regional issues that Cohasset faces include the restoration of the Greenbush commuter train line, the redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, and the widening of Route 3. "Neither one may have a direct impact on Cohasset, but they certainly have an indirect impact," Callahan pointed out. "Will the widening of Route 3 have an impact on Route 3A during construction?"

Cohasset currently is a member of the South Shore Coalition — a part of the MAPC made up of South Shore towns. The town recently teamed up informally with Scituate for the purpose of hiring a consultant for Greenbush issues.

Callahan said Vision 2020 is focused more on the big picture, "not just within our borders, or neighboring town...but bigger."

10-year olds capture District 8 Little League championship

The Cohasset 10-year old travel baseball team won the District 8 "A" Division Little League Championship this summer. Playing against larger towns such as Scituate, Canton, Weymouth, Rockland and Stoughton, the Cohasset nine compiled a 6-3-1 record during the regular season.

The team was led by the strong and consistent pitching of Brian Hill, David Snowdale and Sam DeGiacomo, along with the clutch hitting of Tommy Chase, Mike Grimm and Kyle Pinkus (all of whom batted over the .400 mark for the year).

Cohasset received solid contributions from all 12 members of the team, which also included Pat Doonan, Cody Morgan, Justin Hollis, Chris Rose, Cliff Musto and Chris Mills.

Bill Grimm, Mark DeGiacomo and Bill Hollis coached the club.

"Our boys played with a lot of confidence and heart all summer," Coach Grimm summed up of the successful season. "Every night they played aggressive, intelligent baseball and consistently made the plays in the field.

"We ran the bases well, executed the little things like the sacrifice bunt and got some key clutch hits. We seemed to have a new hero almost every night and every player on the team contributed.

"The coaches are very proud of the commitment and sportsmanship this group displayed. The boys represented the town well and really came together as a team."

Cohasset saved its best baseball for the District 8 playoffs. The team played three games over three consecutive nights in August against the iron of the league: Scituate, Stoughton American and Rockland. Stoughton National, Whitman, Weymouth and Abington also had qualified for the single elimination tournament.

Cohasset- 2, Scituate 1

The first playoff game may have been the toughest. It was a tight pitching duel which lasted three extra innings. Five-foot-six-inch Blane O'Brien started for Scituate and threw "smoke." Cody Morgan led off the Cohasset first with a bunt single down the third-base line. After a sacrifice bunt by Mike Grimm, Kyle Pinkus drove in the run with a clutch double to left center to give Cohasset the 1-0 advantage.

In the top of the second, O'Brien blasted a 215 foot homerun over the left field fence to tie the game for Scituate.

Pitching dominated the rest of the game. Brian Hill threw six outstanding innings for Cohasset (striking out seven) and Sam DeGiacomo followed with three strong scoreless frames. The Scituate pitchers matched the Cohasset effort until the bottom of the ninth.

In the bottom of the ninth, Hill walked for Cohasset. He was then advanced to second on a perfectly executed sacrifice bunt from Chris Rose down the third base line. Using his sensational speed and base running instincts, Hill was able to race all the way to third on the play. Cliff Musto then followed with Cohasset's biggest hit of the year, a solid line drive to right field which plated the winning run, a fantastic finish to one of the best Little League games played around here in a long time.

Cohasset- 10, Stoughton American- 4

The Cohasset bats came alive the next night against Stoughton American in Stoughton. Cohasset jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning and never looked back. Pinkus, DeGiacomo and Pat Doonan had big hits in the rally.

Cohasset then added another five runs in the second on three walks (Mills, Morgan and DeGiacomo) and clutch hits by Hill, Grimm and Pinkus.

Cohasset also took advantage of its running game in the early inning onslaught, stealing six bases.

David Snowdale made sure the early lead held up, pitching six strong innings and striking out five.

Cohasset made some outstanding plays in the field, including a diving stop by Doonan at third that saved two runs and two fly ball putouts by Chris Mills in left. From right field, Justin Hollis forced a runner at second in an outstanding "heads up" play.

When the dust settled, Cohasset had the victory and was on to the championship game.

Cohasset-5, Rockland- 4

The next night, after getting Rockland 1-2-3 to open the game, Cohasset loaded the bases in the bottom of the first inning but did not score.

Rockland rallied in the second for two runs, but Tommy Chase was brought in to relieve Mike Grimm on the mound and promptly stopped the bleeding.

Cohasset stormed back in the bottom of the second. Justin Hollis started the rally with a solid single to center. After Hill reached base on an error, Chris Rose singled. Cohasset used the fake bunt/steal to move the runners into scoring position, and Cliff Musto plated

That winning edge

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

As chronicled here, the Cohasset 10-year old All-stars won the District 8 championship with solid pitching, well-balanced and timely hitting and excellent defense. Of course, it also didn't hurt that they had a human good luck charm in the form of Chris Rose.

Rose, who played first base for the All-stars, has known nothing but the height of success over the last year. Before the All-star season got underway, Chris was a mainstay with the first place Dodgers this spring in little league play. This past winter, Chris hit the three point shot that won his team the league championship in the Cohasset Youth Basketball League. Last fall, he was a member of the newly formed Cohasset youth lacrosse travelling squad that went undefeated in play throughout the south shore area.

Oh yeah, and he was a straight A student last year to boot.

Savage sets the pace for Cohasset runners in Falmouth Road Race

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Among the 9,200 plus runners at this year's Falmouth Road Race were several from Cohasset.

Michael Savage, 50, finished with a time of 54:39, good for 1100th among the men (1347 overall). This year made 14 times the Cohasset native has run in the prestigious Falmouth event. He runs in approximately six middle distance races a year, and also has six marathons on his running resume, including last year's Boston Marathon, which he finished in under four hours.

"I'm not going to break any records in any of these races," joked Savage. "I run to stay in shape, and I run in races to have a little fun."

And, as just about anyone who includes the Falmouth Road Race on their regular racing circuit will attest, this race is one of the best for that.

"There's just no event like it," said Savage. "It's open to just about everyone and yet it still attracts all of these world class runners and celebrities. It's a lot of fun just being down there whether you're in the race or not."

"It's just the best race around," echoed David Wessman, of Scituate, who finished with a scalding time of 44:37, good for 271st overall.

James O'Sullivan, 20- 4809th/66:45
Lisa Swain, 39- 5549th/69:47

The two runners most responsible for the "running boom" in the United States in the 70s and 80s were on hand and went head to head in the 50-and-over division. Local favorite and three-time Falmouth winner Bill Rodgers bested two-time winner Frank Shorter, who captured marathon gold medal in Munich in 72 and the silver, four years later, in Montreal.

Cohasset 8-year-olds finish perfect season

"This team was destined from the start. We were fortunate to have such talented, motivated kids, who were eager to practice and learn baseball."
Manager Bob McCunney

The Cohasset 8-year old All-Star baseball team completed their perfect season last weekend, with an impressive 13-1 vicory over Westwood in the championship game of the Braintree Friendship League.

Led by strong pitching, the talented youths hit, fielded and ran the bases well, just as they had throughout their unblemished season to capture the town's first championship in this age division. Fourteen teams representing South Shore towns competed in the annual baseball league. In the semi-finals, Cohasset won a 4-3 nail biter" against their strongest opponent, Duxbury, a team they had beaten in the last game of the regular season to win the Eastern Division crown.

The final game got off to a shaky start, as an error, a walk and a nubber in front of the plate created a bases loaded jam in the first inning. Another infield error allowed a run to cross for Westwood, marking the first time this season Cohasset had trailed in a game. However, ace pitcher Robby McCunney stopped the damage there, striking out two straight to end the threat, and, as it turned out, Westwood's offensive production for the day.

Panic never even had a chance to set in with the Cohasset team, as they exploded for four runs in the bottom of the first inning. Chris Brown delivered the big blow, a bases clearing triple.

Cohasset doubled their output in the second when McCunney helped his own cause a grand slam. A double by Tommy Buckley then put the game out of reach.

Eamon Davis took over for McCunney in the fourth and pitched three shutout innings, aided by sharp infield play. Brendan Doonan's backhand grab of a hot grounder at third, followed by a bullet throw to first to get the runner, highlighted the team's defensive effort.

"This team was destined from the start", said Manager Bob McCunney. "We were fortunate to have such talented, motivated kids, who were eager to practice and learn baseball".

Coach Mike Kearney concurred: "I'm so proud of them. They probably don't realize their accomplishment. It's not easy going undefeated, especially against towns a lot bigger than Cohasset".

Throughout the season, it seemed that each player made a major contribution to winning a game. Clutch hitting by Chris Brown and Jon Giuggios helped beat Quincy, John Kearney's tag at the plate was huge in the victory over Braintree National. Ian Quinlan's triple against Walpole, Dean Driscoll's homer against Sharon and Andy McKenna's RBI double versus Duxbury keyed wins.

"It was like that every game", says coach Peter Buckley. "Usually, there was some thing outstanding— like Jordan Berry's catch of a well hit fly to left that led to a double play in the semi-finals."

Jodi Rosano, an excellent lead off man with speed around the bases and Derek Youngman, a solid hitter rounded out a powerful attack.

As with all great teams, the pitching was excellent. Although this Cohasset squad was blessed with a number of boys who showed a talent for pitching. Robby McCunney's performance was truly impressive. In pitching 25 innings this season, he allowed only two runs (both unearned), four hits and had 62 strikeouts. Brendan Doonan and Eamon Davis each provided strong pitching support.

them with a double into the gap in left center. He later scored on another fake bunt/steal when the Rockland catcher overthrew third base.

Cohasset scored the eventual winning run in the third when Hollis' fielder's choice drove in Kyle Pinkus, who had singled to start the inning.

Tommy Chase's pitching (seven strikeouts in 4-2/3 innings) and outstanding Cohasset fielding kept Rockland at bay the rest of the way.

There were tense moments, as Rockland got to within one run but Cohasset finally had its championship when Cliff Musto caught a fly ball in left center for the final out.

This was Cohasset's first District 8 Division "A" championship in some time. The boys celebrated that night with a team/family dinner at the Ground Round in Hingham. It was a fitting and well earned end to the Cohasset Little League season.

Spirit of fallen Marine kept alive

Fifth Annual Coby's Run set for Sunday

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Holly Madden-Wanta has been living in Scituate for three years and never met Coby Cutler. Yet, the 34-year-old Madden-Wanta has been moved by the story of Cutler's death on Parris Island a few years back when he was struck by lightning during basic training for the Marine Corps.

The tragedy and the public outpouring of sympathy and remembrance of the popular Scituate resident are just two of the reasons Madden-Wanta will once again be on the starting line of the 10K (6.2 miles) in Sunday's Coby's Run 10K/5K/1K.

"The start was pretty moving last year when they played the national anthem," said Madden-Wanta, who went on to win the women's division in 40 minutes, 36 seconds. "I think there will be a big showing."

All three races start at 9am at the Gates Intermediate School. They follow a scenic course along the oceanfront and there is a tough climb up Beaver Dam Road to the finish line.

Madden-Wanta, who averaged 6:33 miles, said the half-mile long hill slowed times but is a big fan of the course.

"It's a very nice course," said Madden-Wanta. "It can be a little windy near the water. The hill is really long. Just when you think you're at the top, there's a turn and you go up a little further."

Proceeds from the race go towards the fitness center at Scituate High School, named after Coby. Last year, 293 runners finished the 10K race and 140 more crossed the finish line of the 5K (3.1miles) event.

Scituate's Solomon Tsegai averaged 5:14 miles to take the 10K last year, while South Weymouth's Greg Putnam pounded out a 15:03 over the 5K route, a blazing 4:51 pace. Melissa Henderson of Abington was ninth overall in 19:10 to take the women's division.

Rick Cutler, Coby's father, is hoping for a field of 800-900 runners this year and said the race has gained momentum and sponsors since the inaugural year in 1996. As of Wednesday, there were 400 runners registered.

"It's a beautiful course," said Cutler. "Runners like it because they go by lighthouse point, and because there's a hill a the very end, and it's a real killer."

The race has kept Coby's spirit alive over the years and it is an event, Rick said, in which his son probably would have participated.

"Coby was a runner," Rick said. "He was big into physical fitness. He was a real gym rat."

Coby's mother, Quincie-Ann, said the day is still "bittersweet" but it's the people involved who make the difference.

"It's bittersweet that we've lost our son who we absolutely adored," she said. "The sweet parts are the wonderful friends who have helped us put the race together.

"It doesn't get better but it's different. The bright thing in our lives is that we had Coby. And I think the bright thing in his life was being a marine. He'll always be a marine.

"It's a nice day, and as far as we're concerned the runners are all winners."

Registration is $12 and T-shirts will be given to the first 300 pre-registered entrants. Awards will be presented to the top-three finishers in several divisions of both the 10K and 5K.

Runners can register on Saturday from 9am-12 at the junior high school and on the day of the race at Gates.

The events two major sponsors are Saab Automobiles and Horizon Wireless.

Cohasset's Stop & Shop donates all of the food for the event's participants— including "tons of yogurt and juice boxes", according to Mrs. Cutler. Belmont Springs donates all of the water.

There will also be a raffle for TVs, VCRs and round trip tickets.

For more information, call (781) 545-7116 or fax (781) 544-6086.

Rodgers, who is having a great year in the 50-plus division, captured his 15th victory in 17 races in his age group. The other two races resulted in second-place finishes. Shorter, who beat Rodgers for Falmouth wins in 75 and 76, is currently running 50-70 miles a week and said he is looking forward to adding more intense track workouts to his schedule.

Shorter thoroughly enjoyed his Falmouth race this year and was able to take in the whole atmosphere of the event. "I think I've gotten to the point where I enjoy the other runners, all the spectators who cheer you on and being around all the fun," said Shorter as he cooled down just outside the elite-runners tent. "At the start, a young kid said to me, 'I hate this part the most.' I told him, 'Yeah, I used to too.'"

Shorter first ran Falmouth in 75 when the race's founder, Tommy Leonard, persuaded Rodgers to invite Shorter to run. Shorter had destroyed the Olympic Marathon field in Munich, while Rodgers was coming off his American record-breaking win in his first of four Boston Marathon victories in April.

"Tommy asks me to invite Frank and he comes here and kicks my ass," said Rodgers with a laugh, which was kept busy signing autographs for fans and admirers. "In a way, those races feel like a lifetime ago."

Rodgers said Falmouth is one of those "special races" where he absolutely wants to run his hardest, regardless of how he feels or what kind of shape he is in.

"There's this feeling inside you that there are certain races that you should run," Rodgers said.

At 52, he still savors the duels he had over years, not only with Shorter in 75 and 76, but the battle with Herb Lindsay for second place behind winner Craig Virgin in 1979. There was also the duel along Surf Drive in 1978 with a 20-year-old University of Oregon student named Alberto Salazar. Rodgers went on to win the race in 32:21 for his third win.

But it was the Rodgers/Shorter match-ups of the mid 70s that captured the imagination of a whole new generation of runners. The Shorter wins at Falmouth were vintage battles. Shorter also defeated Rodgers in the 1976 Olympic trials and again in Montreal. Rodgers dropped to a disappointing 40th overall after his training was interrupted by an arch injury in the weeks leading up to the race.

"It happens to everyone," said Rodgers. "We all have our bad races."

"I think we were pretty intense when we were beating on each other," Shorter said of his classic races against Rodgers, who he considers a good friend. "What was unique was that we were the two best in the world at the time and from the same country."

With the Olympics behind him, Rodgers packed in the miles for a supreme effort in the New York City Marathon. Racing in 45-degree temperatures, Rodgers raced away from Shorter and scored a decisive, three-minute win in 2:10:10. Shorter finished a distant second with a time of 2:13:12.

"Oh yes," Rodgers said seriously, when asked if the New York City win was one of the most important of his career.

The male winner of the race was Mark Yatich, of Kenya, who ran the third fastest time ever in 31:43. Joseph Kimani, of Kenya, took second in 31:46, just edging out the first American finisher Khalid Khannouchi, of Ossining, N.Y. (31:47).

The first female finisher was Loriah Kiplagat, of Kenya, who shattered the previous Famouth race record by five minutes, running 35:02.

SPORTS NOTES

Fall sports physical examinations/user's fee

A physical exam is required for all students planning to play any fall sport at Cohasset Middle-High School.

Dr. Steven Golden will be in the health room at the middle-high school for all boys soccer, girls soccer, field hockey and football players in grades 9 to 12 on Thursday, Aug. 24, at 4 p.m. Please note this will be the only time physicals will be offered by the school before practice begins on Monday, Aug. 28.

If you are unable to take advantage of the physical at this time, you will need to be examined by your family physician. The physician's report must be presented to the school nurse, stating the student is in good physical condition to participate in the sport. If there is going to be a problem making the school physical time, call Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 to make other arrangements.

Student athletes are also reminded that they must bring their $75 sports user's fee to the first practice. If there are questions or problems, again, please call Ron Ford.

No student will be allowed to begin practice until he/she has had a physical examination and paid $75 user's fee or made other arrangements.

Crew Team Begins Practice

Cohasset Maritime Institute is pleased to announce that it will be sponsoring a high school crew team to compete in the open water rowing races held this Fall throughout New England. Students interested in participating in this sport should contact Jack Buckley at 383-8261. Practice will start the week of August 14.

Cohasset Youth Soccer raffle

The Cohasset Youth Soccer League is sponsoring a raffle to raise funds for the fall 2000 and Spring 2001 town soccer programs. The club is raffling a classic 1966 Ford Mustang Convertible. Tickets are $5.00 each or 3 for $10.00.

Winners will be announced on Tuesday, September 5, 2000, outside Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Street. The winner need not be present to win. Maximum number of tickets available for sale is eight thousand (8,000).

To request tickets, get facts about the car and see a color photograph, visit www.mustangraffle.cjb.net. Or call 781-383-7017. You must be 18 years of age to participate.

Cohasset Soccer Club

The Cohasset Soccer Club will have a middle school team for the girls and the boys. These teams will consist of players who do not make the tryout-based school team or choose to play for the club team for other reasons (for example they might not be able to make the required school practices due to other commitments).

The soccer club will hire a professional coach who will have three to four practices during the week and play a Saturday game in the Cranberry League. There may also be a mid-week game against some of the local private school teams. There are no playoffs in the Cranberry League.

There will be no registration for this team until the first or second week of school and the middle school teams have made their selections. The cost of the program will be $125 for the fall season (eight weeks). It is more costly than our other programs because of the paid coach. The schools "users fee" for the middle school team is less but is also taxpayer subsidized.

For more information, call Wallace St. John, 383-2552.

Cohasset woman experiences Democratic convention firsthand

By Rick Collins
RICK@WICKENC.COM

Sometimes when you lose in the short-run, you win in the long-run.

Dorothy Keville ran former New Jersey senator Bill Bradley's local campaign. Though Bradley lost in Massachusetts, and eventually dropped out of the presidential race, he did win in Hingham and Cohasset. As a result, Keville was able to make her way to the Democratic National Convention last week in Los Angeles as a Bradley delegate.

She ran unopposed for the required female delegate's seat at this year's state caucus. "To run as a [Vice President Al] Gore there was a lot more competition," she said.

The convention was Keville's third – she was a delegate for George McGovern in 1972 in Miami, and helped out with security for former Massachusetts governor Michael Dukakis during his presidential bid in 1988. But she said this convention was her favorite.

"The energy was so wonderful and everyone was so happy," she said. "There were 4,000 delegates and 20,000 people [in attendance]. The combined energy of everyone wanting the same thing was electric and delicious at the same time."

The thing Keville said that had changed the most since her first convention in 1972 was the presentation of the convention itself. "The speakers were all on time. In 1972 we nominated McGovern at 2 a.m. in the morning. The music that accompanied the introductions for the speakers ("Camelot" accompanied Caroline Kennedy) was choreographed better, making it much more exciting and moving," said the 68-year old "fiscally conservative" life-long Democrat. "The speakers made dynamic presentations. The dynamic of issues were much more realistic and doable.

"It was much better than expected. I was very impressed with the quality of speakers and presentation."

As most people can imagine, watching an event such as the convention is much more exciting in person than watching it on television. Keville said she "felt very blessed" to be in attendance. She recalled tears in her eyes as Gore, his selection for vice-president Connecticut senator Joseph Lieberman, and all the other Democrats stood on stage, with hands joined, as confetti and balloons fell from the Staples Center ceiling.

"The energy was fabulous...It was the culmination of five days of sitting hour after hour participating and wanting to drink in what they were trying to give us, and to have us understand," she said.

Highlights for Keville included listening to Caroline Kennedy, Caroline's uncle, Sen. Ted Kennedy, and President Bill Clinton. "My first vote was for John F. Kennedy...she told us that her parents were introduced by Al Gore's parents. It kind of tied everything together.

"One of the other things I was very proud of was Sen. Kennedy giving credit to the Republican members of Congress that helped champion pieces of legislation...I thought that was really the greatest difference between this convention and the Republican convention, where I felt like the Republicans were having [Texas Governor George W. Bush] run against Clinton, and didn't acknowledge any cooperation with the Democrats. I was proud of Kennedy giving credit where credit was due."

The most heard complaint about both conventions was that there wouldn't be any surprises, with both parties' candidates long established. Both parties even announced their vice-presidential candidates before the convention. So what, a lot of people asked, was the point of holding a convention?

"Though you know what the income was going to be, we found out how they were going to express to America what the Democratic values are, the programs and issues," Keville answered. "[We learned] how they would get those things across in a way to help voters decide whether to vote for Gore or Lieberman."

By law, Keville was required to vote for Bradley at the convention on the first ballot, unless Bradley released his delegates, which he did. "He called all his delegates together and released us to Gore," Keville explained.

When not attending conventions, Keville is a consultant on HIV public policy. She is currently trying to establish a non-profit organization called "Africa Bridge" that would bring American knowledge and resources to Africa in an attempt to curb the HIV/AIDS epidemic the continent is experiencing. "I spoke with Gore's campaign manager [Bill Daley] and I'm going to be sending my proposal to his campaign," she said.

During Dukakis' run for office in 1988, Keville worked in the campaign's Philadelphia office, and has volunteered once again to travel to Philadelphia.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Holden contrasts self with opponent

State Representative candidate Mike Holden pointed out the significant differences between himself and his opponent in the Democratic Primary at a recent gathering hosted by Cohasset resident and Hingham businessman Greg Acerra. He thanked his supporters for the opportunity to serve as an elected member of Hingham's boards of health and selectmen. "My experience in government, as a father of five young children and as an employer in here in town has given me a perspective on such issues as education, health care and transportation that no other candidate offers." He added that the differences run much deeper than perspective. "The difference between myself and my opponent," Holden explained, "is the difference between government and politics; it's the difference between leading and campaigning; it's the difference between standing at the front of the room to advocate for people and standing in the back of the room to work the crowd." Holden explained the differences are significant. "If you believe as I do that education, health care and transportation are critical issues facing our families, than you would agree that our next state representative has a very important job. I've taken a stand on these issues and other controversial topics and I've been willing to take a beating for what I thought was right. You cannot expect someone to be a voice for others under the pressure that exists at the State House if he hasn't had the courage to do it at his own Town Meeting."

Opponent out of line, Bradley says

Saying that voters in 3rd Plymouth District deserve more than political "sound bites", former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley spoke out about the personal attack issued by his opponent.

"My opponent was out of line when he questioned my courage to stand up for our district at the State House," said Bradley. "I stood up for our community for over three years as an Assistant District Attorney, helping to prosecute hundreds of cases. I also had the courage to run two years ago against a popular incumbent and while doing so, I spoke about issues such as quality education for our children, affordable health care for all citizens, lower taxes and safer neighborhoods. It is unfortunate that my opponent has chosen to personally attack me instead of focusing on the issues that will improve the quality of life for all residents in our district."

"I believe that politics is about more than speeches and sound bites," stated Bradley. "How a candidate runs his or her campaign speaks volumes to how they will serve our district as State Representative." A state representative has to listen to people's concerns and bring the community together rather than divide it.

"When I ran two years ago and won the Democratic Primary, the campaign was about issues. While I disagreed with Representative Murray and with certain votes she cast, I refused to make any personal attacks. Voters deserve a healthy debate on the issues, but they do not deserve, nor do they want, cheap political gimmicks and personal attacks," added Bradley.

Hedlund fundraiser

The Committee to Elect Robert Hedlund for State Senator will host a "Fun"raiser Family Day at the Sons of Italy, Corner of Kilby and Rte. 3A in Hingham on Saturday, Aug. 26. The event featuring children's' games and face-painting will run from 1-4 p.m. A $20 donation covers cost of "all you can eat" barbecue, including "Fenway Park's Famous Sausage King" and entertainment. Children eat free.

Town counsel says Roys' 75-foot yacht is okay

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Is it legal or isn't it?

Does the town's jurisdiction over boat size extend to crafts tied to private docks?

These are the questions being mulled over and debated by town counsel and Cohasset's harbor committee.

The boat in question is the 75-foot yacht currently berthed at the private dock behind the Margin Street home of Cohasset businessman Peter Roy.

Town bylaws prohibit boats more than 45 feet from mooring in Cohasset harbor. But what is not clear is, if the ban extend to boats tied up in the harbor's waters, but to a private dock.

According to town counsel Paul DeRensis, it does not.

DeRensis was recently asked to look into the dilemma by selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad after town residents questioned the legality of the boat. Harbor committee chairman John Bertolami reported at Tuesday night's committee meeting that he spoke with Haddad earlier that evening and was told that town counsel decided the town did not have jurisdiction over boats tied to private docks.

DeRensis' decision was supported by Charles Humphreys, a lawyer for Roy. He said because the bylaws regulating the harbor don't specifically mention boats tied to private docks, Roy's boat is legal. "If [the right to navigate waterways] is abridged, it has to be strictly done," he said adding that the town can't change the meaning of a restriction to affect one person, in this case Roy. "It has to be strictly construed."

Humphreys said his understanding of the bylaw refers to boats attached to either a town mooring, or in a slip in a marina, which is subject to harbormaster's regulations. Since Roy's boat is attached to a legal, town-approved but private pier, harbor regulations do not extend to him.

Harbor committee member Jack Brister was the most vocal in his opposition to DeRensis' ruling. He said Roy had promised to abide by the harbormaster's regulations back when he appeared before the committee several years ago, when he was first planning the pier. He also read from a recent state court decision that said a town can have jurisdiction over a private pier if in public waters.

Humphreys challenged the validity of Brister's argument saying he "took everything [Roy's statement and the court decision] a step further." Humphrey said the court case mentioned "doesn't apply" to the Roy issue and said Brister was reading into the decision too much. He added Roy meant he would follow whatever harbor regulations he must adhere to, but did not believe, and still does not believe, a limit on boat size applies to boats tied to private docks. "The bylaws, as currently written, do not preclude boats on private docks," he said.

Bertolami cautioned those in attendance at the meeting that they were hearing DeRensis' decision second-hand, and said the group should wait until the decision is submitted in writing.

Nevertheless, the board approved a mostly-symbolic motion by Brister saying the harbor committee recommends selectmen back enforcement of the harbor regulation regarding sizes of boats moored or docked in Cohasset Harbor.

Linda Shropshire, a spokesperson for Roy, said she wasn't surprised at DeRensis's decision.

"We wouldn't have brought in a boat that size if we weren't confident we had a legal basis to do so," she said, adding that she was surprised at the depth and time put into the argument Brister made despite the town counsel ruling. She also expressed concern at the lack of communication between Roy and the board. "Their minds seemed to be pretty much made up...They didn't want to listen to anything we had to say."

According to Shropshire, the boat will be moored for the majority of the year in a slip in Florida.

Some officials say the Roys' yacht, shown here, should not be permitted to dock in the harbor because it's bigger than regulations allow.

Rizzo responds to community concerns regarding CRC

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Dean Rizzo, director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, responded to residents concerns regarding the intentions of the private non-profit group, at this past Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

The CRC was created earlier this summer by town businessmen Gerd Ordelheide, who owns the Red Lion Inn, and Peter Roy, owner of Kimballs and Atlantica restaurant, in an attempt to spark village and harbor revitalization discussions.

Some town residents have expressed concern that the group will have total control over any renovations the village or harbor area might receive, but that it is not the case said both Rizzo and selectmen.

"It's important to realize that they cannot go out and do [any improvements] on their own," selectman Michael Sullivan said. He added that residents would have opportunities to comment on any plans CRC presented to the board and would also have a say during any town meeting vote.

Rizzo added that any grants that are applied for to use in any renovation project would have to come with Town Manager Mark Haddad's signature.

"We're basically getting free planning," said Sullivan.

Board chairman Thomas Callahan said the CRC will allow the town to get feasibility and cost analyses on long-discussed things such as, underground utilities and traffic flow throughout the village area.

> "We need new sidewalks; we need the streets done."
> — Selectman Merle Brown

The CRC recently opened its Elm Street showroom and Rizzo reported "it has been very helpful for some people" to better understand the organization's goals and proposals.

Rizzo said representatives from the Cecil Group, a Boston-based landscape engineering firm, have attended a couple of receptions the CRC has hosted and have been able to obtain opinions from town residents. Rizzo hopes to hold a couple more public forums in the fall, and begin the official design process by the end of the year.

He emphasized that any plans people might see or hear about are just ideas, and nothing has been set in stone. "We're going to throw out some plans and see what ones come back, though some come back a little stronger than others," Rizzo said.

Rizzo said he hopes the cost for any renovations, if approved, would be paid for through a "three-way partnership between private sources, the town and state or federal grants.

Responding to a question from a member of the growth and development committee in attendance, Rizzo said the CRC's goal is not to turn Cohasset Village into a "tourist mecca" attracting thousands of visitors a year with fancy downtown shops. "Our intention is not to change the look and feel of the area...there's no marketing campaign planned," he said.

Selectman Merle Brown said he believes the group will focus on the desired essentials of the village. "We need new sidewalks; we need the streets done," said Brown.

With Rizzo in attendance, the board discussed the creation of a town-appointed board to work with the CRC and keep selectmen updated on its progress, on the urging of absent selectman Ronnie McMorris. The committee will replace the defunct Cohasset Revitalization Task Force, which Rizzo used to head up.

Callahan said the committee will reserve two seats for former members of the task force, two representatives of the CRC, two residents, one merchant, one representative from the growth and development committee and a representative from the board of selectmen. Approved to be charter members of the committee were Lucia Flibotte, Joseph Coggins, Josiah Stevenson, Tim O'Brien and Merle Brown.

Garage news

Cohasset Youth Resources will hold an "End of Summer Dance" for grades six through eight at the Garage, on Friday, Aug. 25, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m.. $5 admission per person.

Summer hours will continue at the Garage until Monday, Aug. 28. The Garage will not be open Wednesday, Aug. 30, reopening on Friday, Sept. 1.

Fall hours will begin on Friday, Sept. 8, from 6:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. and Saturday's from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m., starting Saturday, Sept. 9.

The full fall, 2000 schedule will be available by late August.

Fridays mean art

Fridays are art days at the Hull Lifesaving Museum this summer, 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. Meet at the museum, bring snacks, beverages, a hat, and your own supplies. All are welcome to join the informal, leaderless-but-inspired group throughout the summer, sharing a love of art. A different locale will be picked each week - museum, sea wall, Windmill Point, Spinnaker Island, or any secret places the group chooses to explore. Let there be no regrets come September that you should have painted more. Call Bonnie Guild, (781) 925-5433.

DEBATE
The historic Winslow House on Careswell Street in Marshfield is the setting for democracy in action as Democratic state senate candidates
Jim Cantwell and Ted LeClair face off in a debate on Monday, September 11 at 7 p.m.
The event will feature the two candidates who are vying for their party's nomination in the primary. One would then face off against incumbent state Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, in the November election. The debate will be moderated by the League of Women Voters. A panel of journalists will question the candidates.

Jim Cantwell
The event is free and open to the public. Come hear where the candidates stand on the issues.

Police made 34 arrests in July

"July was another very busy month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 34 arrests: one for Assault and Battery; one for Operating Under the Influence; four for Protective Custody; one for a warrant, one for Disorderly House, and 26 for Minor Transporting Liquor," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During the month the police department investigated 11 motor vehicle accidents, two of which resulted in injuries. There were 116 motor vehicle citations issued, totaling $2070 in fines. Additionally, there were 216 parking tickets issued for $5,850 in fines.

Also, in July the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 711 calls for police services, of those 159 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

"The police four-wheel drive unit has been refurbished and is now in service," Noonan said.

Marijuana possession arrests

Three youths arrested for possession of marijuana this week were put in a diversion program by Quincy District Court because they had no prior records, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police arrested Douglas Rodrigues, 18, of Scituate; Arthur K. McRae, 19, and Daniel Phillips, 20, both of Marshfield at 12:45 a.m. Sunday on Government Island and charged them with illegal possession of a Class D substance (marijuana).

Police on patrol approached a car that was parked illegally and on further investigation discovered a marijuana cigarette, rolling papers and small plastic bag containing marijuana.

What caught the officer's attention was a pile of cigar tobacco and cut up pieces of cigar on the ground next to the driver's door. Police said some people that use marijuana roll it in cigar wrapping to smoke it. On the street this type of marijuana cigarette is known as a "blunt," police said.

Jackson said the youths must attend a MADD-sponsored program on substance abuse.

New water tank to blend with the sky

By Mary Ford
MFORD@WICKC.COM

You'd better look soon if you want to see the new $1.6 million water tank atop Scituate Hill off Rte. 3A.

That's because although the new tank is up, it will soon become nearly invisible.

In the next week or two, the structure which is coated with a dark green primer will be painted Cumulus — a light blue paint flecked with white — named after the fluffy clouds with the rounded tops.

Water commission chairman John McNabb Jr. said the color would help the tank blend into the sky.

Construction on the new 1.8 million-gallon tank began March 30 and will be completed on schedule by December, McNabb said. Although the tank is installed, a 12-in. connecting pipe is needed and something called an altitude value chamber that tells the elevation in the tank.

Once the tank is on-line, the town's existing standpipe on Bear Hill will be able to be emptied and cleaned. The new tank, approved at the 1997 Town Meeting, will also help improve fire protection by increasing water reserves for the town.

"We'll be able to clean sludge out of the old tank," McNabb said. "And flush the system that will improve water quality throughout town."

McNabb said plans are to paint the Bear Hill tank with the Cumulus-colored paint as well, and improve the landscaping around the site, something that should please the neighborhood. Neighbors won the battle not to have the second tank installed atop Bear Hill for aesthetic and safety reasons.

The new Cohasset water tank atop Scituate Hill will soon be painted Cumulus so it blends in with the sky.

Bringing Brimfield home

Giant flea market is setting for Scituate author's first book

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

There's a fine line between Fortuna and fame.

Michael Fortuna of Scituate will officially release his first novel "Brimfield" on Sept. 7. Released to some local South Shore book shops in July, the new book set around the annual Brimfield Flea Market, is already receiving some rave reviews.

"Brimfield" is currently available locally at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Front Street Books in Scituate Harbor.

"It's been selling well the last few weeks," Fortuna said. "It's an easy read, and I think people will enjoy it."

Fortuna set his novel in what he says is one of his favorite scenic backdrops in the world—the renown annual Brimfield Flea Market.

"It's the largest outdoor flea market in the world," Fortuna said. "It's been held since the late 1950s. The Brimfield flea market is known to be the absolute Mecca for antique dealers around the country. The flea market itself consists of a mile of dealers along each side of Rte. 20 (in Brimfield). There are always about 5,000-6,000 dealers on hand, and about 100,000 people visiting each year."

Fortuna said his book had its true debut at the flea market in July and he plans to do a book signing there in September.

Fortuna said his novel is "a story of love, obsession, and deceit set on the sensory-overloaded fields of the Brimfield flea market. The thrust of the story is that Brimfield is the ultimate one night stand." Fortuna's story focuses on a woman named Zoe Madden, a recent widow, who is making her first trip to the flea market.

"She's a novice antique dealer," Fortuna said of the novel's main character, "and when she goes to Brimfield, she finds a certain antique that really reminds her of her late husband. The twist of the story is that eventually, she finds out that the antique she purchased is not what it's supposed to be. One of the main themes of this book is 'be careful what you buy in Brimfield—you may fall in love with it.'"

> "It has other elements like suspense and things about the world of business. It will probably be like anything else—some people will love it, and some people will say they couldn't get through it. But it's an emotionally-based book with a lot of interior qualities to it, and I think a lot of people are going to like it."

Fortuna never really planned on writing a novel. Until recently, all of his writing experience came through his job as an advertising executive at Arnold, Fortuna, Lane (in Boston), now Arnold Communications. Fortuna was one of the founding partners of the company, which he said is now one of the "largest advertising agencies in the country."

"I worked in that industry until 1996," Fortuna said. "At that point, I just decided to leave and start writing novels. I had a reflective itch, if you will. I wanted to do a job where I wasn't asking for a (purchase) order."

Fortuna said the Town of Brimfield was one of the first concepts which came to mind for a story.

"I had been going there for the past 20 years or so as antiques collector," he said. "I always go there and buy various things. It finally occurred to me that going to the Brimfield flea market was like going to Woodstock. I always found it really amazing. In 1996, I looked at Brimfield and just said to myself 'this would make a wonderful background for a story.'"

Before he even started writing the novel, Fortuna knew there would be a market for it because of high-popularity television shows like "Antiques Roadshow."

"I felt I had a built-in market for this kind of book," he said. "There are tons of people out there who collect antiques, so my idea was to have those people as a base. I knew the subject matter of the book would appeal to a more universal audience as well because it has a cultural aspect to it. The novel investigates the reasons people buy things, and it's also about the power of objects. Those are concepts many people can relate to."

Rick Springfield will be performing at the South Shore Music Circus Friday night.

Rockin' runs in the family

Rick Springfield has date at Music Circus

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Like father, like son. Rick Springfield may be the most famous rock musician living in his Los Angeles home, but he isn't the only one.

"My 14-year-old son, Liam, is in his own rock band. The group is called "Coal" and they play music like "Korn," explains the Grammy Award-winning performer best-known for 1980s hits like "Jessie's Girl," "Affair of the Heart," and "Human Touch."

"Liam's group often rehearses at our house. He also plays all his new songs for me which means a lot, because he values my opinion. When I was 14, if my parents liked a song that I liked then I immediately saw it as crap," says the Australian-born singer and actor. "It is very different between Liam and me.

Liam doesn't do covers of his father's music, however, which is just fine since Dad isn't about to put down his guitar. Indeed, when Springfield takes to the South Shore Music Circus stage this Friday night, it will be one of more than 150 concert dates on his current tour.

> "I get an incredible connection from people when I'm on the road. The shows are almost like parties. It is not like the frenzied idol period earlier in my career. I'm really enjoying the smaller venues. When we performed for 30,000 people, the connection we made was very different."

Musician takes her ambitions on the road

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Twenty-three-year-old Scituate native Kara Tondorf is following her dreams of a successful music career to Los Angeles. But before she leaves on that jet plane in January, Tondorf will celebrate the release of her new album "I Like Your Face" Thursday (Aug. 24) at a gig she's playing at The Sea Note in Hull.

Tondorf said she plans to make the most of the fall on this coast, touring the area that for now — she calls home.

"I'm moving to Los Angeles in January," Tondorf said. "But this Fall, I'm going to be trying to do more touring around the East Coast before I go."

Tondorf said her trip to Los Angeles is a "personal" journey, and she believes there are many musical connections to be made on that side of the country.

"I'm just going to go and see what happens," she said.

Tondorf, a senior at the University of Massachusetts at Boston is relatively new to the music business. In fact, she did not start playing music until 1995 — her first year in college.

"I always liked music but I just never played. I started playing guitar and singing right after high school," she said. "When I started, I just played for fun, but whenever I went out and played at various open mic nights around school, I ended up getting gigs. People wanted to book me for shows."

As time went on, Tondorf became more intent on refining her style. She started

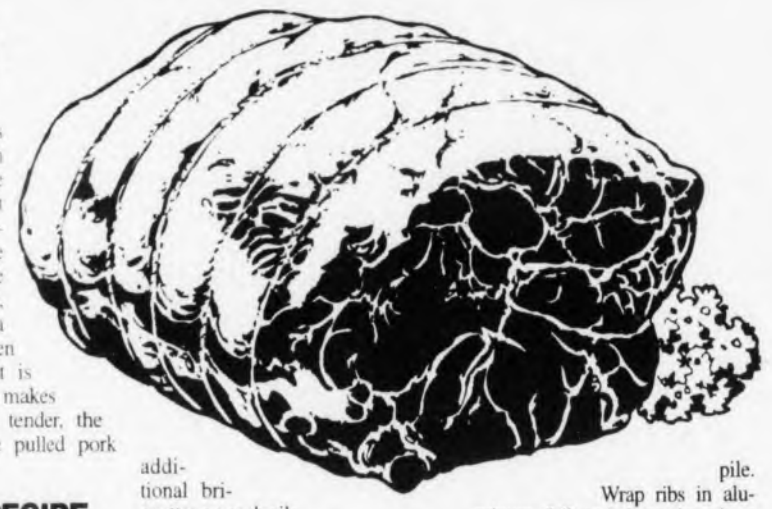
Real pork barbecue at home

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL



Can a reasonable approximation of authentic pork barbecue be prepared at home on a simple kettle grill? That was the question I set out to answer as I spent the better part of a summer fiddling with different fuels, temperatures, and methods to produce a moist, rich-tasting pork barbecue of either ribs or pork butt coated with spicy rub and served with the traditional cheap store-bought bread or hamburger rolls.

I knew that barbecue is a low-heat method of cooking, which is good for inexpensive cuts because the meat is cooked slowly and has time to convert the collagen — the tough connective tissues — into gelatin. The tough muscle fibers do better at low heat as well. With too much heat, the fibers in the outer part of the meat shrink, expelling juices. The question was, what is the best method for creating and maintaining the proper low-heat cooking environment.

I tried most every type of fuel and found that natural hardwood briquettes were best. Self-starting charcoal left an unpleasant flavor in food cooked in a closed environment. To add smoke and, therefore, flavor, I also found that any bunch of soaked wood chips will do fine —cedar and hickory chips being widely available. I dare any barbecue expert to tell the difference between cherry and apple chips. (That being said, mesquite chips will strongly flavor fish.)

To set up a grill for barbecue, place an aluminum foil pan in the middle of the grill on the bottom, right below the food to be cooked, so that any fat drippings will not cause flaming and so that the meat is not too close to the heat source. (This is unnecessary when barbecuing pork butt since I cook it in a disposable aluminum pan.) Start by igniting 30 briquettes, let them heat up for 20 minutes, (if you have the charcoal holders sold by Weber, place 15 in each one, putting the holders on opposite sides of the grill). Split them into two piles on either side of the grill and then place six unheated briquettes on top of each pile, and then replenish every 40 minutes or so with six additional briquettes per side, jostling the hot briquettes with tongs to knock off the ash.

The experts say that the heat should be kept at a steady 200 degrees - not 250 or 275. In my testing, however, I found that the temperature jumped all over the place, running from 170 degrees up to 230 degrees. I also found that the temperature at the top of the grill (inside) is a good 30 to 40 degrees less than the temperature at the surface of the grill. (Keep this in mind when using a thermometer built into the top of the grill. If you don't have a built-in dial, simply insert an instant-read thermometer into a partially closed air vent.) I did not find that removing the top to add more fuel or chips was a big problem. The grill comes back up to temperature in just two or three minutes. To maintain a steady temperature, not an easy task, I found it best to leave the bottom vents full open and the top vents about 20 percent open. If the top vents are fully closed, there is insufficient draft and the fire will die down.

Ribs cooked in just two hours or so but pork butt, a classic barbecue cut takes about five hours. Although I used to cook the pork butt entirely on the grill, an article by Cort Sinnes in Cook's Illustrated Magazine changed my mind. Now I barbecue the pork butt for three hours on the grill and then cover it with foil and place it into a 300 degree oven for about two hours longer. This is both easier and keeps the meat juicier since it steams in the aluminum wrap. The final step is to place the wrapped meat, either butt or ribs, in a paper bag which is then closed and the meat is allowed to rest. This makes the meat truly fork tender, the equivalent of a true pulled pork experience.

MASTER RECIPE FOR SLOW-COOK BARBECUE

Large chunks of wood are better than small chips, which will burn off quickly. When the coals are hot, add six new briquettes to each pile to keep the fire going. I add six briquettes per hour to each side to maintain the proper heat.

3 pounds pork ribs or 4 pounds boneless pork butt
1 cup Barbecue Rub

1. Rub meat with barbecue rub and set aside at room temperature while preparing fire. (This can be done up to two days ahead of time if wrapped in plastic and stored in the refrigerator.) Start two small piles of charcoal on either side of a covered grill, 15 briquettes each. If cooking ribs, place a drip pan in the middle half-filled with water. Place an oven thermometer on top of the cooking surface. After 20 minutes, place six additional briquettes on each pile of coals and add soaked wood chips on top of the briquettes. Add six new briquettes to each pile every 40 minutes or so. Add new soaked wood chips as needed.

2. For pork butt, place meat in a disposable aluminum pan, place on rack, cover grill, and cook for three hours. Remove from grill, cover pan with aluminum foil, and place in a preheated 300 oven for about two hours or until the meat is fork tender. Remove from oven, place pan in a paper bag, close bag, and let rest one hour before serving. Barbecued pork butt can either be sliced or chopped and served in a sandwich (cheap white bread or hamburger buns are best).

3. For ribs, barbecue covered for about two hours or until the meat reads 150 degrees on an instant read thermometer. Maintain an even 200 degree cooking temperature by checking every hour or so, adding three to five new briquettes to each pile.

Wrap ribs in aluminum foil and then place in a paper bag for 30 minutes before serving.

BARBECUE RUB

If you like a little less heat, back off on the chili powder and the cayenne. Most cookbooks tell you to let the meat stand one hour covered with rub before cooking, but I don't find this to be necessary.

2 tablespoons coarse salt
3 tablespoons brown sugar
1 tablespoon cumin
2 teaspoons ground cardamom
2 teaspoons allspice
2 tablespoons chili powder
2 tablespoons black pepper
2 teaspoons cayenne pepper
3 tablespoons paprika

Mix ingredients. Rub over meat before cooking.

writing her own songs, and she started laying down the tunes on four-track recorders.

Her recent years of songwriting and self-recording have resulted in her new 12-song album.

"All the songs on the CD were written over a three-year period," Tondorf said, "and during that time I just never had a chance to make a record."

Last year, Tondorf teamed up with Scituate music producer Barry Marshall in order to put down all of her songs in a professional studio. Marshall recruited five Boston-area musicians to play on the album, and Tondorf's recording dreams quickly became reality.

The album was recorded at Sonic's studio in Charlestown, at Mission Control Studios in Falmouth, and at Naked Ear Studios in Boston. The record was mixed at Sound Mirror in Boston.

"I usually play solo," Tondorf said of her performance methods. "But (Marshall) got some great people to play on the record." She added her studio band mates will be accompanying her at the upcoming Sea Note gig as well.

Tondorf said she hopes her musical style will be received well, and noted she's had success at the gigs she's played around Boston.

"For the most part, I've played at various clubs and bars around Boston," she said. "But I've also played at different colleges around New England, and even some clubs in New York City."

Tondorf said it's tough to put a finger on what describes her musical style.

"It's hard to define," she said. "It's sort of like acoustic pop-rock." She added her sound has been compared to that of contemporary musicians like Ani DiFranco, Patti Smith, Macy Gray, and The Counting Crows.

"Songs just come to me. I go on writing binges. Sometimes, I can write a lot of songs in a short period of time, but other times I can't think of anything. Most of my songs are open to interpretation because I write about certain parts of life, feelings, and situations."
Kara Tondorf

"People seemed to catch onto my music pretty quickly when I first started," she said, "so I guess that's why I decided to pursue it."

Tondorf said aside from the musicians whose sound she shares, some of her primary influences include people like Billie Holliday, Bob Dylan, Janis Joplin, Bob Marley, and bands like the Grateful Dead.

"I like a lot of different stuff," she said.

When it comes to actually writing songs, Tondorf has her own specific methods.

"Songs just come to me," she said. "I go on writing binges. Sometimes, I can write a lot of songs in a short period of time, but other times I can't think of anything. Most of my songs are open to interpretation because I write about certain parts of life, feelings, and situations.

Tondorf's advice for up and coming musicians who want to get noticed is "Just keep at it. The less of an attitude you have, the farther you'll get."

She is hoping that philosophy will carry her along way when she gets to California, but the bottom line for Tondorf is creating great songs.

"I just want to unite with different people and play music," she said.

Tondorf's show at the Sea Note (189 Nantasket Ave, Hull) begins Thursday at 8 p.m. The cost for the show is $7. For more information on the show call the Sea Note at (781) 925-4300. To get a copy of Tondorf's new album send $15 plus $1.50 for shipping and handling ($16.50) to Kara Tondorf, C/O Sugar Madison Records, PO Box 2563, Jamaica Plain, Ma, 02130. Bringing Brimfield home

After he finished "Brimfield" Fortuna said he was ready to self-publish the book, but after realizing the size of that task, he enlisted the help of David Replogle of Cohasset, a man with a great deal of experience in the publishing area. Replogle held positions at publishing companies like Doubleday, Encyclopedia Britannica, and he even served as the CEO at Merriam Webster.

Although Fortuna recruited Replogle for the sole purpose of selling "Brimfield" to a publishing company, Replogle had other plans.

Replogle said he had always wanted to have a publishing company of his own, so he founded Hot House Press in Cohasset.

"When I came to (Replogle) to get him to sell the book, he told me he was thinking of doing this other thing (starting the new company) anyway," Fortuna said of Replogle's plans. "It all just kind of worked out."

"Brimfield" is Hot House Press's first novel published.

Replogle's reasoning for quickly starting Hot House Press was that he wanted to find a way to get less-known authors more exposure.

"When it came to selling 'Brimfield' to a large (publishing) company, my first thought was that a lot of people will only publish the works of a small circle of celebrity authors," Replogle said. "It's difficult to get these companies to read smaller books by less-known authors. At the same time, (Fortuna) had the manuscript for 'Brimfield' and I thought it was great. I figured I had 40 years of experience in the publishing business, so finally I said 'why don't we just publish it ourselves?'"

And so they did. With its nationwide debut a few weeks away, Fortuna is putting some finishing touches on two other books he has in the works and basking in the favorable spotlight for his first effort.

"It's a love story," Fortuna said of "Brimfield."

"But it has other elements like suspense and things about the world of business. It will probably be like anything else—some people will love it, and some people will say they couldn't get through it. But it's an emotionally-based book with a lot of interior qualities to it, and I think a lot of people are going to like it."

For more information on Fortuna or to purchase his novel "Brimfield" call Hot House Press at (781) 383-8360 or log onto the website at www.hothousepress.com. "Brimfield" is also available at www.amazon.com.

"Brimfield" is author Michael Fortuna's first book.

Rockin' runs in the family

but second son, Joshua, 11, is sometimes in tow. "I love it when he comes out with me. We often go fishing or do something else together that we both like."

Touring is something Springfield also enjoys.

"I get an incredible connection from people when I'm on the road. The shows are almost like parties. It is not like the frenzied idol period earlier in my career. I'm really enjoying the smaller venues. When we performed for 30,000 people, the connection we made was very different."

Springfield has sold more than 18 million records in his 14 album career which began with "Speak to the Sky" in 1972. He has toured the world many times on the power of multi-platinum albums including "Working Class Dog," "Success Hasn't Spoiled Me Yet," "Living in Oz," the soundtrack for his 1984 feature film, "Hard to Hold," "Tao," and "Rock of Life."

This time out, Springfield is touring in support of "Karma," his first album in two years. As with all his projects, Springfield either wrote or collaborated on all the new music. He also played 80 percent of the instruments, including guitars, Dobro, bass, keyboards, drum programs and loops.

Speaking by telephone from his California home, Springfield - who turns 51 on August 23 - laughs as he recalls the "Karma" recording sessions. "It was really great and really horrible. It was wonderful and painful. I'm my own worst critic. Everything becomes like a zit on prom night."

The studio time now behind him, Springfield is pleased with the outcome. "The album is all about relationships. I wrote it about people I've loved and about some people whom I've lost. 'Karma' was written entirely on acoustic guitar. Whatever instrument I write on helps shape the music. The guitar worked well, because the songs on the album have a spiritual edge."

His Cohasset audience can expect to hear Springfield's new material as well as his hits. "I've never thought of a live show as a forum to foist a whole new album on an audience," he says.

Which doesn't mean that the one-time "General Hospital" heartthrob has any plans to just rest on his laurels. "I had some nervousness this time out, because I wasn't sure whether this tour would be something new or just a nostalgia act. The songs are all mine, though, so I have more control. Springfield even decided to re-record his best-sellers for "The Greatest Hits Alive," a new live album set to be made available next month on rickspringfield.com, the performer's website.

Whether performing familiar or new songs, Springfield still finds his career challenging. "I'm still hungry. I still want to hear my songs on the radio. Hearing my songs on the radio is one of my favorite things. People often ask me which of my songs is my favorite. I say I haven't written it yet."

(Rick Springfield will be at the South Shore Music Circus, 130 Sohier Street, Cohasset, on Friday night. For tickets and information, call 781/383-1400.)

There's help for consumers with credit problems

New mortgage program available

Are credit problems hurting your chances of buying a new home?

It can take a long time to repair a bad credit history, but there is plenty of advice out there on how to get started.

The Financial Assistance Network in Washington, D.C. has just published a new booklet, "Credit — Your Financial Power Tool."

The 48-page publication includes information on how and where consumers can get credit even if they are having problems paying bills. The booklet also instructs consumers on how they can legally rebuild their credit.

Also, a new mortgage program is helping Massachusetts consumers with excessive debt and impaired credit to become eligible for an affordable conventional mortgage.

Consumer Credit Counseling Service of Southern New England recently announced that it is partnering with Freddie Mac and Bank of America to introduce Freddie Mac's CreditWorks mortgage program to local consumers.

For years, CCCS has provided comprehensive debt management programs to hundreds of thousands of residents in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

CCCS was chosen to provide comprehensive debt counseling that will allow potential borrowers in the state to qualify for the CreditWorks mortgage program underwritten by the Bank of America.

CreditWorks borrowers must participate in a CCCS Debt Management Plan for at least 18 months. By making timely payments on an existing Debt Management Plan, and participating in CCC's homebuyer education, potential borrowers may quality for a market rate home mortgage, despite very low credit scores.

Without CreditWorks, people with credit problems would have to spend years re-building their credit to qualify for market rate mortgages.

Bank of America will originate CreditWorks mortgages which Freddie Mac will purchase. CreditWorks mortgages are 30-year, fixed-rate loans on single family properties.

According to the Federal Trade Commission, many companies advertise that they can repair a consumer's poor credit history, but they cannot provide a completely clean record.

Good credit starts with sensible money management.

"Credit — Your Financial Power Tool," is a booklet that "covers all aspects of credit including applying for credit, getting more credit to reduce interest costs, handling bills and bill collectors, and restoring credit after financial problems," says Jim Asvar, a researcher at Financial Assistance Network.

Consumers can get a copy of the brochure by sending $5 to cover the cost of printing, postage and handling to Financial Assistance Network, Credit Booklet Offer, Dept. CR-0801, P.O. Box 60944, Washington D.C., 20039-60944.

For more information on the CreditWorks mortgage program call 1-800-208-2227.

IN BRIEF

DeWolfe appoints new manager in Marshfield

Pegi Brock

Marshfield resident Pegi Brock has been named the new manager of the Marshfield DeWolfe branch. Brock and her family moved here from Chapel Hill, N.C. in 1997. She comes from a very strong management background and owned and operated her own interior design company in Chapel Hill before deciding to enter the real estate field. With the knowledge of interior design, Brock has been able to ready "sellers" homes as well as suggest to her "buyers" things that could be done to enhance other homes. Brock had been an associate with the DeWolfe Norwell office before being asked to take the position in Marshfield.

In her new position, Brock will work closely with sales associates identifying the various services and resources that afford DeWolfe buyers and sellers the convenience of one-stop shopping.

Crescent announces top brokers

At a recent sales meeting, Michael Richardson, president, Crescent Realty Group announced the top brokers in sales and listings for the month of July. The top sales agent is Bob Salamone and the top listing agent is Pauline Petro.

"I can't think of anyone more deserving of this sales award than Bob," said Richardson. "He is hard working, highly skilled and thoroughly professional, surely a winning combination."

Richardson praised Petro who has been the recipient of many awards, including the coveted Broker of the Year award. "She is conscientious and thorough," remarked Richardson. "Her customers and clients love her and so do we."

Conway honors mid-year top producers

Jack Conway & Co. recently honored its top-producing sales agents for the first six months of 2000. The awards were announced at the real estate company's annual mid-year awards breakfasts, held on July 12 and 14.

More than 60 agents were recognized at the ceremonies, which were conducted by Conway President Richard F. Cahill and vice president of Sales Denis Lilla. The events recognize the top achievers in the company during the first half of the calendar year.

Financial planner Noreen Carey-Neville was the featured speaker at the July 12 breakfast at Lombardo's in Randolph. At the Plymouth Sheraton on Friday, WATD-FM owner Edward Perry was presented with a plaque in honor of the radio station's receipt of the Edward R. Murrow Award for Excellence. The Radio and Television News Directors Association, a national trade group, administers the award program named for Murrow, the legendary radio and television journalist.

Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co., the largest privately owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, has more than 600 associates in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The company recently was named the 77th largest realty organization in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Dividing and transplanting iris and daylilies

The recent arrival of colorful chrysanthemums at our local nurseries and farmstands triggers conflicting emotions for many passionate gardeners. For many of us, the appearance of these mums, ornamental kale, and fall-blooming asters signals the coming of autumn. Several crisp, chilly evenings have only served to reinforce this impression as many of our annual plants and vegetables struggle to produce their usual bounty, still awaiting the arrival of summertime warmth and sunshine. In a growing season when Mother Nature seems content to deliver an everlasting spring, the rapid approach of summer's traditional finale is truly bittersweet.

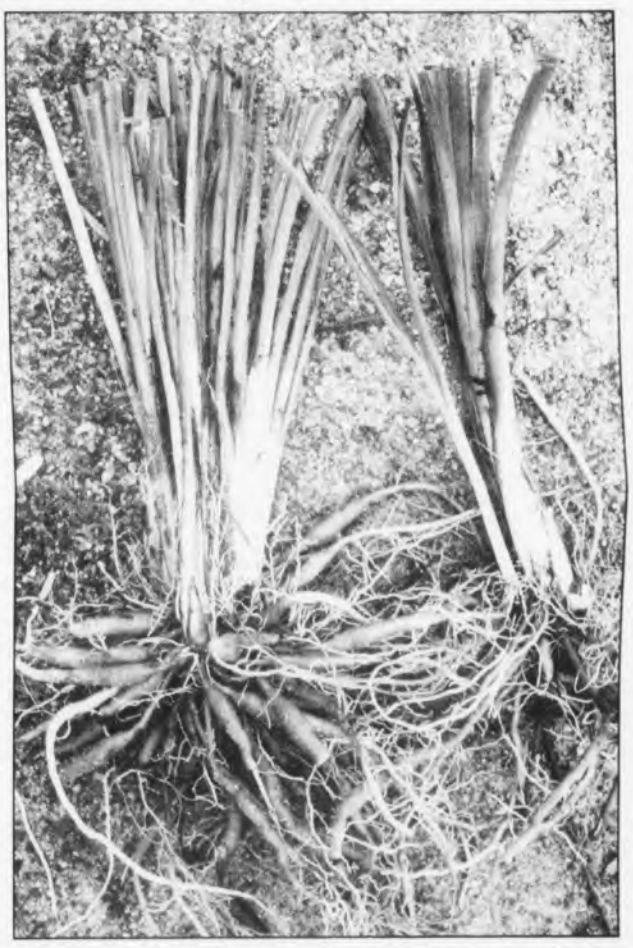
Many plants have appreciated the cool, damp summer weather and consistent moisture, especially our lawns and moisture-loving perennials. Slugs and snails are in their glory, as any hosta-lover knows, the damp conditions ideal for their proliferation. Frogs and toads should be flourishing, although the resident frog population around my small water garden is relatively constant from year to year. Bunnies and chipmunks seem to be enjoying banner years, their expanding citizenry happily grooming all the lush vegetation.



One distinct advantage to this season's plentiful moisture is that trees, shrubs and perennials are in excellent condition for transplanting. During periods of prolonged summer drought such as we experienced last summer, fall transplanting is often discouraged as many plants, particularly trees and shrubs, cannot tolerate the additional stress of having their roots structures disturbed. Although the transplanting of most trees and shrubs should wait until later in the fall, the latter half of August is an ideal time to dig, divide and replant iris and daylilies.

Bearded iris, with their large, fleshy rhizomes and broad, blue-green, sword-like foliage, appreciate division every three to four years. If transplanting is performed later in the season, you run the risk of the rhizomes heaving out of the ground with the alternate freeze-thaw cycle which is typical from October to December. Use a pitchfork to lift the entire plant out of the ground. With a clean, sharp knife, remove old, non-productive or borer-damaged rhizomes, selecting firm, healthy tubers. Trim back the foliage by half.

Bearded iris prefer well-drained soils in full sun. Amend your planting location with new loam, compost, peat moss, and sand, especially if the soil tends to be heavy or poorly drained. Add lime as bearded iris prefer soils having a more neutral pH than our typically acidic conditions. Some of rhizomes may have limited root systems. To best anchor these roots, dig a wide hole and then form a mini-mountain of soil within the hole. Place the rhizome on the top of the mound and spread the roots down the side, backfilling with your remaining soil. Reset at least three to five plants with the fans facing in different directions to form a clump; water to settle the soil and remove air pockets. The top of the rhizome should be exposed. Avoid applying mulch over the rhizome or burying the entire fleshy tuber as this often leads to rot and may reduce or eliminate flowering.

Overgrown clumps of daylilies can also be separated now. Lift clumps and remove as much of the soil as possible to best view the individual plants known as fans. Pull apart or separate plants, if possible, by hand, leaving three to five fans intact. Large, unwieldy clumps can be tackled by inserting two pitchforks, back-to-back, into the clump and pushing against one another to initiate the splitting process. If fans are especially dense and tightly knit, use a knife to cut through just the crown of the daylily (about 1 inch deep, where the leaves meet the roots) and gently ease plants apart to minimize severing roots. Cut back the foliage by at least a half and replant using the same method of a mound within a hole as recommended for the bearded iris. The crown of the plant should be no more than 1 inch below the surface.

Daylilies are particularly fond of moisture-retentive soils despite their ability to tolerate drought. Amend depleted soils with compost, manure and peat moss. While a location in full sun is usually ideal, daylilies will still flower in as little as four to six hours of filtered sunlight a day. Copious quantities of water are the key to their success. Transplanting can be performed later in the fall, but as colder weather and frost dates approach, the risk increases for heaving during the winter months. Plants which can reestablish their root systems prior to cold weather are more likely to bloom reliably next season.

In another week or two, both Siberian and Japanese iris can also be transplanted. Unlike their cousins, the bearded iris, these two types of iris plants have dense clumps of thick grassy foliage and small, fibrous rhizomes. They need not be divided as frequently as bearded iris, but appreciate splitting when clumps become overgrown and rhizomes become woody. As these irises prefer moist, acid soils, their roots should not be allowed to dry out during the transplanting process and bountiful quantities of organic matter should be added to the soil.

Daylily Society Plant Sale and Auction is Saturday, Aug. 26, noon, at the Waltham Field Station, 240 Beaver St., Waltham. The public is invited to attend and purchase locally grown daylilies at very reasonable prices. Come early to browse and get information about these diverse perennials.

Prime Real Estate

Antique reproduction subdivision

Start with one of the finest addresses on the South Shore, add the design expertise of the highly respected architectural firm, Strekalovsky & Hoit, and the fine craftsmanship of Harry B. (Jay) Ellis and you have Jacobs Plain, a winning new subdivision. Several cul-de-sac lots and one "form A" lot will surround the existing, charming antique Cape Cod home that has already been lovingly restored. Located in the Liberty Plain Historic District, the Homes will all be in keeping with the unique, diverse and wonderful Main Street architecture, all period reproduction antiques, Georgian Colonials, Federals and Greek revivals. The lot sizes range from 3/4 acre to nearly two acres, and the cul-de-sac will have granite curbing and subtle but elegant landscaping. A spectacular home will be built to the right of the existing home, a straight-front Colonial with farmer's porch, side porch and two-car attached garage, entered from the side. The first floor will feature a large, firepalced great room with octagonal bay window with access to a sun deck, large kitchen with all the amenities, living room, dining room and study, with French doors leading to the porch. The mud room has a storage bench, laundry and large closet. The open foyer leads to the spacious second floor with three good size bedrooms and a fabulous master bedroom also with an octagonal windowseat, large master bath and dressing room. All the homes will have white cedar roof shingles and specialty cut spruce clapboards on the exterior, from a single mill in Vermont. The price will be $779,000 making this one of the best investments on the South Shore. The other seven homes will be customized by the architect to the tastes of the homeowner, and will start at $829,000 for 4,000-square feet of finely detailed craftsmanship.

Information is current as of Aug. 18, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points+APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage. FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate+total points+APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Autumn in New York (C-)

Are you as tired as I of shocked — shocked — mentions of the age gap between screen male performers and their female partners? Or of the tittering in gossip columns about senior gentlemen seen squiring younger starlets? It could be that as your servant, this column's genial author, gets longer in the tooth, he finds that his tastes don't necessarily advance along the age continuum with him, and this mirth about the occasional Sean Connery pairing with an actress less than half his age seems tiresome. I can't get all worked up that Richard Gere, who turns 52 this month (he is 48 in the film) is, in his role in this pretty but unfortunate movie, in love with a 22-year-old, played by Winona Ryder, who is 29.

There is much to like in this film: its look. Gotham in all the seasons is a treat for the eyes here, and the stars, photographed through windows, arches, from odd angles, at varying times of day and night, are always attractive. Gere, one of those actors whose abundance of flowing locks entitles him to be known as a silver fox — it is the having of lots of hair not the coloring of it, that ultimately matters — ages wonderfully, and Ryder, who manages somehow to do gamine roles as gamely as Audrey Hepburn did, and seemingly for as long, looks, even as one said to be dying of an incurable condition, radiant. In movies, people have a way of appearing to be the picture of health, even as we are told they are rotting from within. Would that we all got movie-land diseases instead of real ones.

Will (Gere), a fashionable restaurateur (why, he's even on the cover of New York Magazine!), is a lothario, kept in moral check now and again by his buddy/bartender (Anthony LaPaglia). One evening he meets an old lady friend of his (Elaine Stritch, the other moral compass in the film) and is introduced to her birthday-girl granddaughter, Charlotte (Ryder), who makes idiotic-looking hats for people. Charlotte is accompanied by girlfriends and the requisite cute gay best friend, who remarks admiringly of Will's looks. The gay best friend is now as much a staple of the contemporary American cinema as is the token (but always virtuous and terribly intelligent) black second banana, though somehow this movie is minus that ingredient. The gay friend then vanishes, only to reappear at the very end to fret.

It's yearning at first sight, and soon a romance blossoms, then the revelation that Charlotte is doomed, then Will's fall from grace (on a roof deck, no less, at his bartender's Halloween party), then forgiveness, then illness, then... but why go on? I said at the top that there's much to like here: it's all in the viewing. But there's much to dislike too: the triteness of the plot, the hackneyed writing, the goofy acting, the morbidity, the utter predictability.

Written by Allison Burnett; directed by Joan Chen. Rated PG-13

The Replacements (C)

Strikes by the grossly overpaid children who play the major professional sports tend to irritate the fans, who wonder why these athletes can't make do with several million dollars a year, each. Non-fans of, say, baseball, during the strike a few years ago, silently (or not so silently) gloated in the absence of moronic sports coverage on the tube during hiatus. But sometimes everybody except the striking jocks gets something out of the situation, as in 1987, when the National Football League babies went out on strike and replacement players were brought in. The owners got some dollars and the fans got to watch football, American's Sunday fave (replacing church), which soldiered on, as some unusual fellows were dragooned from wherever and cajoled into playing. They became known, in Washington, where the Redskins went out on strike, as the Scabskins.

On this "The Replacements" has been loosely based. We are with the Washington Sentinels, whose owner (Jack Warden) convinces Jimmy McGinty, a former coach of his whom he had fired, to come on back and assemble a replacement team. Jimmy (Gene Hackman, not breaking much of a sweat to do this slow-mo version of his coach role in "Hoosiers") patches together a motley crew, a veritable diversity monger's dream team. We have a couple of calorically challenged bruisers (Michael Taliferro and Faison Love), one eye-popping jive-talking lad, a religious straight-arrow (Troy Winbush), a just-released-from-prison scary guy (Michael Jace), a rabid L.A. cop (Jon Favreau) who tends to do extensive damage to his teammates in the process of congratulating them, a scrawny Welsh kicker (Rhys Ifan) who smokes cigarettes while playing, a deaf guy (David Denman), a sumo wrestler (Ace Yonamine), and, as quarterback, Keanu Reeves, who is here called Shane Falco, and whom we meet scraping barnacles off ritzy boats in the Washington basin.

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

This is about all you need to know to get a sense of what's about to happen — oh, and yes, there is a voluptuous cadre of cheerleaders, most recruited from a strip joint, headed by a level-headed lass (Brooke Langton) — she runs a bar when not cheerleading — who eventually succumbs to Shane's mumbling charms. And, yes, there are the replaced professionals, who act, expectably, like babies, vengeful about and sneering at the scabs. We've several minutes of football play, in which our hero, who as always does what is less a job of acting than a task of existing, seems to be participating (maybe, like Tom Cruise, he insists on doing his own stunts, but I doubt it), a few maudlin turns in the plot, a couple of musical numbers as the replacements break into what might pass for dance at a drunkards' ball, and, for those with good memories, borrowings from a dozen or so better films.

Written by Vince McKewin; directed by Howard Deutch. Rated PG-13.

Even if his team of replacements is a winner, Keanu Reeves' movie is a loser.

Airline refund policies

Ask George

By George Hobica
COMICS NEWS SERVICE

Q. In a recent column, you included a Q&A about airline ticket change and refund policies, and you suggested that other airlines should follow the example of Southwest Airlines, which "maintains the most liberal ticket reissue and refund policy in the business."

We flew SWA from Los Angeles recently and arrived at the airport three hours before our scheduled flight's departure. As we checked in, we noted that we had time to get on an earlier flight and that seats were available. But the SWA agent told us that we were on a restricted ticket and, therefore, could not go on standby for the earlier flight unless we paid the price of a full unrestricted ticket.

I see no reasonable explanation for this policy. Allowing us to go on standby for any vacant seats on the earlier flight would have cost SWA absolutely nothing. Furthermore, if we were successful, it would have freed up our seats on the later flight to perhaps be resold to some other travelers, a financial plus for SWA. Since it was a direct flight, there was no chance of conflicts at intermediate stops. All SWA accomplished with this inflexible response to a reasonable request was to generate ill will. Yes, I'll no doubt continue to fly SWA, since their prices are very competitive, but my opinion of their ticketing policies is nowhere near as favorable as yours.

A. You're right. Southwest isn't as flexible as other major airlines when it comes to standby travel. If you're flying on a discounted advance purchase ticket you have to pay the price of a full fare ticket in order to go standby, wiping out any savings. It isn't logical since other airlines, which are less flexible in other ways, do permit same day standby travel on earlier or later flights without additional payment or penalty. But Southwest's low prices and flexibility on refunds and ticket reissues makes up for this inconsistency.

Q. You've recommended hotels in New York and elsewhere that are good choices for businesspeople who need to get online with their laptops, without fussing with adapters for the phone and electrical connections.

The first thing I do when I check into a hotel room abroad is to see if there's the same type of plugs for the phone and electricity that I have at home. Also, I tend to spend hours online doing work, so I need a hotel that provides free or cheap phone access to my Internet service provider.

With that in mind, can you recommend a hotel in central London that offers laptop users "plug and play" access and that doesn't gouge guests for local or toll-free phone calls?

A. A good choice is the club floor rooms at the Langham Hilton. All rooms come with two-line phones, so if you're online you can still make and receive phone calls; desk height U.S.-style modem and electrical plugs (no adapters needed); and free local phone calls or toll-free calls charged at 2 pounds per call.

For reservations, call 011-44-20-7636-1000, your travel agent, or 800-HILTONS.

Q. My wife and I, both senior citizens, would like to take a trip to Spain in October. My wife has a medical condition that makes her unable to make long plane trips without pain and distress. We're having trouble finding an airline that will sell us a ticket with multiple stops at a reasonable price. We'd like to fly from San Diego to Minneapolis, then from there to Rome, then to Madrid, then to Little Rock, Ark., and then back to San Diego, stopping along the way.

A. It is difficult, and sometimes dangerous, for older travelers with circulatory and other medical conditions to make long plane trips in the cramped conditions of the typical economy airplane seat. And buying a single ticket as you've described would indeed be expensive.

One option might be an around-the-world ticket, which actually requires that you make at least three stops (try www.ticketplanet.com as a source). RTW fares are surprisingly reasonable, considering that you can make layovers.

Or, you might use senior coupons (available from any airline) to do the domestic portions of your itinerary (San Diego-Minneapolis, Little Rock-San Diego) and then get a cheap consolidator ticket from round-trip New York to Madrid (try lowestfares.com or look in your local Sunday newspaper's travel section), and then use a discount airline pass program like Europe by Air (www.europebyair.com) to go from Madrid to Rome and then Rome to Madrid for the flight home.

Otherwise, as you've discovered, your trip is going to be very expensive.

Hubert van der Lugt of Hub Shipping supports plans to upgrade Cohasset Village.

Looking to past for future of village

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Business people come from all over the world to visit Hubert van der Lugt at Hub Shipping in Cohasset Village. Van der Lugt's visitors come from Europe, Asia, South America and other parts of the world to conduct business and experience a real American town. Invariably, van der Lugt's cosmopolitan friends are charmed by Cohasset's quaint buildings, rugged coastline and seafaring heritage.

"The people we do business with want to stay here, not only to be close to our company but because Cohasset is beautiful, and they want to see the old houses and the coastline," van der Lugt said. "Cohasset has a unique character that we should work to preserve."

"There are always a few people who say no to everything, but if people always thought like that, we would still be moving around in horse and buggies."
— Hubert van der Lugt

But preserving that character is not synonymous with doing nothing to upgrade the village, van der Lugt said. Without going into specifics, van der Lugt said he is an enthusiastic supporter of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's (CRC) efforts to make improvements to the village, although he spurns the word revitalization.

"There has been a lot of talk about revitalizing the village, but that implies that it's dead," van der Lugt said. "It's not dead. I think upgrade is a better term."

He also rebuts critics who say the best plan for the village is no plan. "There are always a few people who say no to everything, but if people always thought like that, we would still be moving around in horse and buggies," van der Lugt said. "Some people have said we should follow the KISS (Keep It Simple Stupid) philosophy. But that doesn't mean we should do nothing. We need discussion, and participation, and ideas and criticism too — there's nothing wrong

School doors open Sept. 6

Renovation, reaccreditation mark new year

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though the weather has finally brought a touch of summer to the area, it couldn't have come at a worse time for Cohasset schoolchildren. On Sept. 6, after one of the mildest summers in memory, Cohasset schools will open their doors and welcome back an expected 1,348 students.

The next couple of years will be hectic, if not exciting for the school department. This spring, ground will be broken in the town's $41 million renovation projects at the middle/high school and Deer Hill School. The school system's accreditation is up for renewal in 2002, and it hopes to repeat its stellar performance in last year's MCAS testing.

"I can't wait for it to get going, despite knowing that we're beginning three to four years of really an involved time with the school remodeling project," said school department superintendent Edward Malvey.

According to Malvey, 54 new students are expected to enter Cohasset public schools this year. "We're seeing some increase in the lower elementary level, particularly the lower

Hurricane ready

But town hopes to keep its lucky streak alive

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"Unfortunately, people get lackadaisical."
— Arthur Lehr, civil defense director

It's been nine years since Cohasset experienced a hurricane, after being hit twice in six years. In 1985, Hurricane Gloria blew through New England, but had lost most of her punch by the time she reached the South Shore, as did Hurricane Bob in 1991. Though both storms left thousands without electricity — some for days — the fall hurricanes, in terms of damage, were merely spring rain storms, when compared to the rash of winter nor'easters the region experienced in the early 1990s.

Nothing personified recent toothless hurricanes more than last year's much-vaunted Hurricane Floyd, which proved to be a bigger bust than the last Star Wars movie.

But that makes Arthur Lehr all the more nervous.

Lehr has been Cohasset's civil defense director for the past 15 years, and said though the town hasn't had to declare a state of emergency due to a hurricane in a while, he hopes people will remember that a severe storm may be closer than they think.

"We really haven't had anything other than isolated power outages from fallen tree limbs," said Lehr. "It's been quite a while...Unfortunately, people get

Candidates prepare to square off at debate

Bradley, Holden to address issues at forum sponsored by Mariner

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With August segueing into September, days are getting short for candidates running in Sept. 19 state primaries. Hingham Democrats Mike Holden and Garrett Bradley have both been criss-crossing the Hingham, Hull and Cohasset district in their attempt to gain the nod to run for Mary Jeanette Murray's (R-Cohasset) state representative seat this fall.

One week from tonight, on Sept. 7, Holden and Bradley will square off in a debate — open to the public — sponsored by the Cohasset Mariner, at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island. Both candidates feel they are ready for the debate and are looking forward to it.

"I like to debate. We had some healthy debates last time prior to the general election," said Bradley, referring to his failed 1998 bid to unseat long time incumbent Murray. "It's a great opportunity for people to see you react to questions that you don't know what they are."

"I'm certainly looking forward to it," Holden said. "I think it will be a good opportunity for folks to see the two candidates side by side, and compare resumés."

Both candidates say they are prepared and ready for the debate, though the way they got prepared is different.

Bradley said he has been getting ready by walking the district and listening to the stories area residents have to share. "The key is to listen to people and understand the," Bradley said. "Between this race and the last one, I've knocked on many, many doors (8,500 this year according to Bradley), so I don't think there's a question I haven't heard."

Though he knocked on doors with established positions, Bradley said he was willing to listen to both sides, and tried to put faces and stories with issues.

"What I try to do is stay in front of the issues, and get educated as to where I stand," he said. "You have your core convictions but then you go out and talk to people and find out how those issues affect people in the area."

Holden said he has been prepared for a while because he has been "working with people on these issues for eight years." Holden was the chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen when he decided not to seek reelection and instead run for state representative.

He says he enjoys going door to door and attending informational coffees "more than anything," but feels his time spent as selectmen and working on the town's housing partnership committee and board of health has given him a good handle on the issues of the district. "They're not something I'm learning about through the campaign. I've been dealing with them and working on them," he explained.

Holden also said he feels comfortable getting up in front of people that are listening attentively to every word he has to say, also because of his past experience.

Robinson has high hopes for South Shore region

Builds support at annual Republican cookout

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Republican senatorial hopeful Jack E. Robinson took advantage of a beautiful day, at a beautiful house, with a beautiful view of the Atlantic Ocean, to help beat the South Shore Republican Party's war drums, and reaffirm his pledge to beat incumbent US Senator Ted Kennedy.

"I spent a lot of time as a kid growing up here. I feel more comfortable here than anywhere else."
— Jack E. Robinson, Republican candidate for the US Senate

Robinson was one of about a dozen candidates that attended the annual Norfolk and Plymouth County Republican cookout, sponsored by the Cohasset Republican Town Committee, held at the Jerusalem Road home of Ted and Julie Guild.

Reform will be the focus of his campaign, singling out taxes, campaign finance and education as issues in dire need of governmental change. "Ted Kennedy can't bring reform to the government, because [Kennedy] is the government," Robinson said in a brief speech to the crowd of 100 area Republicans.

The cookout is generally seen as a pre-primary rally, and this year's attendees included incumbents, state Sen. Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth), state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset), state representative candidate Mary Anne McKenna, Robinson, and a throng of hopefuls for various county-wide seats. Jamie Bush, a Hingham resident, nephew of the former president, and cousin of Republican presidential nominee George W. Bush, also attended the event.

For Robinson, it was a sort of homecoming. His parents live in Duxbury, and though he grew up in Boston, Robinson said he spent a lot of time in the area thanks to local friends and relatives. "I've spent all my life on the South

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) is sponsoring a community workshop to discuss infrastructure improvement ideas for Cohasset Village on Thursday, Sept. 14, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School auditorium.

The CRC and the town of Cohasset jointly hired the Cecil Group, a Boston-based landscape architectural firm, to undertake an infrastructure improvement study for the village. The Cecil Group has partnered with the BSC Group engineering firm to develop proposals for such items as improved parking, new sidewalks, enhanced pedestrian and vehicle circulation, additional greenspace, increased signage, and the removal of overhead utility lines.

The CRC urges all interested community members to attend and share their thoughts and ideas on present conditions in the village, as well as improvement ideas for the future. Whether you have specific suggestions, want the village to remain the same, or would like to have a better understanding of the revitalization program, the CRC welcomes your participation.

For more information on this public forum, or the revitalization program, call 383-2449, or stop by the CRC office located at 87 Elm St.

Health fair

South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Elder Affairs, Social Services League and Cohasset Department of Health will hold a Multigenerational Recreation & Wellness Fair from 9 am to 2 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 9.

Children can hop on board an antique fire truck and see a real ambulance. Activities will include pony rides, water play, bubble making, parachute time, finger games, face painting, chess, food and gymnastics demonstrations, open bowling, Ha' Penny Theatre will perform "Mr. Bear & Co."

Adults can observe gourmet cooking demonstrations, chowder fest, yoga, blood pressure clinic, foot care, hearing, eye and osteoporosis screening, cholesterol and glucose, skin saver, oral cancer and more.

Save the date, rain or shine!

Farmers Market

The Farmers Market is open from 2:30-6 p.m. Thursdays through Oct.1. Call Julia Peterson at 545-6036 for more information.

Brush chipping

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area on Saturday, Sept. 9 from 7 a.m.-3:30 p.m. No trees over 12" in diameter, no contractors.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Story corrections

A story that ran in last week's Cohasset Mariner about Dorothy Keville's experiences at the Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles incorrectly stated Keville's age and misspelled her name in the photo caption. It also should have said that voters will decide to vote for Gore or Bush. The Mariner regrets the errors.

State recommends changes in Sandy Beach upkeep

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state's Coastal Zone Management office has recommended that the town and Sandy Beach Association consider a number actions that would help maintain the long-term usefulness of the popular beach.

In a letter sent to the town conservation commission, the report said, though overall the beach is in good ecological condition, "there are a number of beach and dune management resources that could improve the ability of Sandy Beach to withstand storm events, protect infrastructure, reduce the need for sand cleanup in the parking lot and on Atlantic Avenue, and improve beach aesthetics."

Among the suggestions were enhancement and protection of the beach's sand dunes, more careful beach grooming, better protection of the bathhouse, and parking lot design changes.

"It's a nice letter and it makes some excellent points," said Sandy Beach Association president Robin Lawrence. He said he expects the association to discuss the letter at its next board meeting in September.

The letter was prompted by a member of the open space committee, which is currently planning a master plan for the town's open and recreational space. Though privately owned by the association, it is open to the public.

Representatives from the CMZ visited the beach on June 8, but didn't submit a report until this month. The report called the beach "an important recreational resource and a beautiful site," but expressed concern over possible beach erosion, which could possibly result in damage to surrounding areas during large storms.

"The volume of sand in the beach-dune system is the key characteristic that determines the ability of the system to dissipate storm wave energy and minimize damage to landward areas," said the report. "The dunes and vegetation help trap sand an keep it in the beach-dune system."

Though the report did say some dunes did have vegetation and were "clearly trapping and sand and growing," it did notice other areas where pedestrian traffic had damaged dunes.

In order to protect the dunes, which helps protect inward land from storm surges and flooding, the CMZ recommended:

installing snow fencing in order to encourage sand trapping designating public access points to the beach planting vegetation to further retain sand

The report said most recreational beach goers "do not intend to be harmful...combining access management strategies with educational signs explaining why and how public access can negatively impact a dune can effectively address this issue in an inexpensive manner."

The CMZ also warned against artificial landscaping of sand, saying "lowering the beach elevation or manipulating the distribution of sediments on the beach makes the beach more susceptible to storm damage and increased erosion. The report recommended cleaning unwanted seaweed, driftwood or other debris with small handheld rakes, rather than large earth movers. This recommendation shouldn't have much affect on the maintenance of the beach, said Lawrence. Currently, the beach is cleaned once at the beginning of the beach season in June by a contractor using heavy equipment, but for the rest of the summer, a cleaning crew cleans the beach using rakes. "We don't really take anything off the beach except for garbage" Lawrence said. "[Excess] seaweed is buried."

When the site was visited by the CMZ, a storm had caused a tidal surge that resulted in the bathhouse being tickled by waves. The report, realizing the expense of relocating or rebuilding the bathhouse, suggested enhancing the dune area adjacent to the bathhouse for "additional protection," as well as also controlling public access paths.

A second point of egress from the 315-spot beach parking lot, which is owned by Cohasset and limited to residents of the town, was recommended. However, selectmen, after the site visit, but before the report was filed, recognized concerns about impeded visibility while exiting the parking lot and voted to reopen the north end of the lot.

Lawrence, a 20-year member of the Sandy Beach Association, called the recommendations "a nice, reasonable approach" and fully expects to discuss the suggestions with the board.

For more than 50 years, the seven-member board of the Sandy Beach Association has owned and operated the mile-long stretch of beach across from Cohasset's Little Harbor. Along with cleaning the beach, the group also provides lifeguard staffing from June to Labor Day. This past year, four lifeguards patrolled the beach's shores, along with a beach manager. The association receives no money from the town, and supplements its budget through fund raising efforts and donations.

Absentee ballots available at Town Hall

Absentee ballots for the state primary Sept. 19, are now available at the town clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Monday, Sept.18, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. Residents may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the town clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democratic, Republican or Libertarian, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party that he is enrolled. However, if a voter is Unenrolled (Independent), he may choose his ballot and after voting will be returned to the unenrolled status without having to file a certificate. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the town clerk's office by Sept.19, to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

Those who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast their vote at the polling place may file a letter from their physician with their town clerk, stating that they are permanently unable to cast their vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot to be signed and returned will be mailed to them by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Looking to the past for the future of Cohasset village with that. We have to agree on an intelligent master plan, and we have to work in stages, over time, step-by-step, and when and where we agree to proceed, we should move forward."

Van der Lugt, a native of Holland, has been in Cohasset for the past 33 years. Van der Lugt firmly believes it is possible to upgrade the village intelligently and tastefully. He should know. Since coming to Cohasset, van der Lugt has dedicated his own time and money to improving the village while maintaining its unique character. In 1987, he expanded his building in such a way that the expansion matched the architecture of the original 19th century structure.

"We went out of our way to make the expansion look like it was always here," van der Lugt said. "The zoning board of appeals was apprehensive about our plan back then. After it was done, a lot of people came up to us and told us they were pleased that the expansion looked so similar to the original building. It shows that it is possible to make improvements while maintaining the town's unique character."

Hubert van der Lugt outside his Cohasset office. Van der Lugt would like to help upgrade the grassy area next to his office.

Some years later, van der Lugt learned of a plan to raze the building now occupied by the Donna Green Art Studio. Horrified at the prospect of a parking lot displacing such an attractive building, van der Lugt purchased and renovated the property. He also purchased the building that houses Fleming's to preserve its presence in the village.

"Can you imagine having a parking lot where the art studio is?" van der Lugt asked. "Now it's a beautiful building, with a courtyard in the back and a walking path. We named the path and courtyard Ship Cove Park. Now we have a nice old Cohasset corner preserved for everyone's enjoyment."

Van der Lugt said he is not the only business owner dedicated to maintaining Cohasset's unique characteristics. He pointed to the facade of the Hingham Institution for Savings as an example of the kind of project that can improve the village while maintaining the town's charm.

Van der Lugt thinks that the CRC is important because it is offering the town a unique opportunity to make upgrades to the village that the town could not otherwise afford. He points out that businesses are contributing money to the effort and getting involved because they care about the village. Business owners want to reside in an attractive space, and they're willing to help make it happen.

"The fact that it costs a lot of money and is a lot of work to upgrade the downtown is not a reason not to do anything," van der Lugt said. "We should at least study and discuss plans for the future, especially in these days of unprecedented prosperity when there is so much money flying around and we have people who are willing to put their money where their mouths are. If the economy turns sour, this source of money may not be available."

One of the people van der Lugt is talking about is Gerde Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn. Ordelheide is one of the principal backers of the CRC — along with Peter Roy — and someone who has certainly upgraded a long-standing feature of the village with his multi-million dollar renovation of the Red Lion Inn. Some critics believe Ordelheide went too far with the renovation of the inn, but van der Lugt wonders whether there were any alternatives.

"Although we heard many different opinions about the Red Lion Inn, would anyone have preferred to leave it as it was?" van der Lugt asks. "Of course not."

Van der Lugt said he supports the work of the CRC because the group has adopted an open door policy that invites everyone in town to participate. He said CRC chairman Dean Rizzo is an excellent liaison to the public because of his interest in building a coalition of people from all interested parties: business, government and citizenry. Working together, these parties can agree on ways to upgrade parts of the village that are in need of improvement.

"The town may decide to put sidewalks on Elm Street, or to reconfigure some intersections to improve the flow of traffic through town," van der Lugt said. "Lets put these kinds of ideas to professionals who study such things. They know how to look at the ideas in ways that aren't obvious to the rest of us. They could come back with suggestions that we could discuss together. Lets not allow ourselves to become polarized about these things." Cohasset is important to van der Lugt. He believes progress is important as long as it doesn't wipe out the things that make people think of Cohasset. In some cases, he even favors eliminating some modern icons in favor of past symbols.

"Whatever we agree on to do with Elm Street, and whatever it looks like eventually, let's agree to giving it back its original name of Ship Cove Lane," van der Lugt said. "Elm Street is such a generic name, and all the Elms are gone. It would be great to drive along Ship Cove Lane and end up at the cove. Ship Cove Lane is a real Cohasset name."

Pursuing an aesthetic touch

Hubert van der Lugt has always been interested in improving the lands that surround his business, Hub Shipping. Whether it was purchasing the buildings that house the Donna Art Studio and Fleming's to save the structures, or cutting down high weeds behind the art studio to build a park, van der Lugt has always been willing to spend his money on improvements that benefit himself and the town. He believes that business owners want to work in a space that is aesthetically appealing and attractive to the residents who serve as their customer base.

Van der Lugt is now hoping he can win the town's support for an idea to improve a piece of town-owned property that sits next to Hub Shipping. At the bottom of Highland Avenue, running up to Stevens Lane is a triangular grassy area and a wooded hillside that van der Lugt would like to improve. He believes his idea is sensible and simple.

"The overgrowth on the hill hides a beautiful rock formation and a brick foundation that used to be a blacksmith's shop," van der Lugt said. "Those rocks are Cohasset, and we should be able to see them. That rock formation could be exposed and serve as a gateway to downtown. The grassy area could become a nice place to stop and rest halfway between the senior center on the way back and forth to and from downtown."

Van der Lugt said it wouldn't be necessary for him to purchase the land from the town, nor would it be necessary for the town to spend any money. Business owners would be willing to pay for the improvements, landscaping and maintenance, just as they have done over the years with Ship Cove Park.

Town hopes to keep its lucky streak alive

lackadaisical."

Though 100 mile-per-hour winds and 10-foot high waves may be things some Cohasset residents have seen only in movies, Lehr and the town are ready to make sure Cohasset survives whatever Mother Nature might throw their way.

"We're pretty much old hands at this," he said. "I'll check periodically with the fire chief [Roger Lincoln] and police chief [Brian Noonan]. If we get an alert of a hurricane pending, a day or two before the expected arrival, we'll get the heads of the town's various departments together and go through the routines."

Lehr's job is to make sure the town's public safety departments are ready to go. The police, fire and public works departments will make sure all needed equipment have their gas tanks filled, all generators are working properly, and will place the American Red Cross on standby. If needed, heavy equipment is brought in by the Red Cross or from the area's Federal Emergency Management Agency headquarters in Bridgewater. Cohasset doesn't experience severe flooding problems like neighboring towns Hull and Scituate thanks to its place on granite ledge, but some areas in town, in particular the Cove at the intersection of Elm, Border and Summer streets and along Atlantic Avenue can experience flooding, according to Lehr. He said, in the past, Army trucks were needed to come in and evacuate residents. He also said the town used to own a "duck" — one of the amphibious vehicles made famous by Boston's Duck Tour program — but lack of maintenance shortened its useful lifetime in Cohasset.

New to the Cohasset police vehicle fleet this year is a 1985 Chevy Blazer 4x4. It is a surplus military vehicle, and Noonan said it will allow police to access just about every inch of Cohasset. "It's a four-wheel drive, oversize Blazer, with a diesel engine. It's got all heavy-duty electrical systems, a dual battery and it's nice and high off the ground."

During the "No-Name Storm" in 1991 a car was stuck in the water near Sandy Beach and the department didn't have a vehicle able to tow it out, according to Noonan. An officer had to use his private vehicle to rescue the passengers. "It gives us four-wheel capability to go through water and through the woods, and it's got all kinds of hooks and tow bars," he said.

Cohasset's position high above its rocky coastline may spare wave damage, but it won't save the town from all types of hurricane-related harm.

"We're probably 20-feet above the high water mark, where Hull could be inundated with a two-foot high wave," said Lehr. "Big thing is, we can't control is high winds."

Two of Cohasset's three high-tension power lines come from Norwell, and are susceptible to wind and tree damage. Another line is run through Scituate, which, Lehr said according to Mass Electric, has less exposure to tree limbs. In an effort to lower the chances of Cohasset being plunged into darkness thanks to a fallen branch, the town has been working with the Asplundh company in trimming tree limbs above power lines.

In case an evacuation was needed — and Lehr said it hasn't happened since 1991 — a shelter is set up by the town and Red Cross in the middle school/high school gymnasium. Another smaller shelter is located at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue, but unlike the high school, it doesn't have emergency power generators.

If a state-of-emergency was declared in Cohasset, Lehr would become the temporary head of the town. "I am empowered to take over and be in charge directly with the town manager [Mark Haddad]." Among his powers is to authorize overtime for town public safety workers. In the early 1970s, after a big storm knocked a number of live wires down, Lehr authorized power to be shut off to the whole town in order to ensure a safe cleanup.

"But I don't do it [assume power] as a know-it-all," Lehr added. He said he maintains contact with the town's fire, police and public works department in order to keep Cohasset running. "I make this a point to say, 'You are all professionals. All I expect is for you to do your job well.'

"We have a heck of a lot of good people."

Noonan said police are in a "constant state of readiness" and essentially all that has to be done in an emergency situation is call in extra people and make sure everyone has their storm gear.

In case of a storm, residents should prepare as soon as possible to avoid a mad dash the night-before. Items to remember include bottled water, milk, bread, canned food, candles and waterproof matches. They should purchase gasoline and propane as needed, and make sure the first aid supply is well-stocked. Use of masking tape on windows can prevent windows from shattering.

Scituate won't back town on Arrowood

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset isn't going to be able to count on Scituate for help in moving the septic systems for Arrowood, a new subdivision, farther back from the town reservoir.

Scituate selectmen voted last week not to support legislation that would allow Cohasset to take land by eminent domain outside its borders in order to protect the water supply. Sixty percent of Cohasset's watershed is outside Cohasset.

In a letter to state Rep. Marie J. Parente, chairman of local affairs, Scituate selectman Ralph Crossen said Cohasset had had ample time to object to Arrowood, a 17-home subdivision in Scituate's West End, as the project made its way through that town's boards.

"The board felt that it is unfair to come forward at this time to thwart a development that already has millions of dollars invested," Crossen stated.

The letter may have been a reaction to potential legal action over Arrowood that could include Scituate.

Water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. told Scituate selectman Susan Phippen last week that a Cohasset lawsuit, by necessity, might have to include Scituate by naming the boards that gave the permits.

McNabb said he is consulting with town counsel to see what legal action the town might take to force the builders to relocate the septic systems, all of which are already installed.

"The board felt that it is unfair to come forward at this time to thwart a development that already has millions of dollars invested."

— Scituate Selectmen Chairman Ralph Crossen

This would be a last-ditch effort by the town to halt the part of the project, which the water commission insists could be a real threat to the town's water supply if the septic systems failed.

McNabb described Scituate selectmen's lack of support for the legislation as written, as both shortsighted and disappointing. Scituate wanted the language changed to include only undeveloped land.

"Limiting it to undeveloped land makes it much less useful to stop something like Arrowood," he said.

But the developers say there is nothing to fear from the septic systems they've installed and distance from the reservoir should not be an issue.

State rules for installing septic systems changed in 1995, after the Arrowood builders got approvals, McNabb said. Under the old rules, septic systems had to be 100 feet — not the 400 feet required today — from a water supply.

But the developers, Steve Bjorklund and Mark Winchester, say they would have put the septic systems in another location, if they could. The closest is about 215 feet away from the reservoir, he said.

Prices for the custom-designed homes in the upscale subdivision will start at about $750,000, Bjorklund said. The 17 homes will be built on 70 acres.

"Any town would love to see a development like that," he said.

AROUND TOWN

BACK TO SCHOOL

Hi Everyone! It is here, the week I have been dreading. This is the week before school starts and my baby officially starts real school. It does not seem possible to me that he is big enough or that he is really 5, but I am. I hope that everyone takes the time this week to get in that one-on-one time with your kids. You can find many ways to do it, but one of my favorite "Mom" jobs is to take them to Kindergarten. Remember that school in Cohasset starts on Wednesday, Sept. 6.

TOP SAILOR

I had a wonderful letter sent to me this week from Andrea Flynn of Summer Street. Andrea wanted to share with all of us the accomplishments of her 15-year-old son, Andrew. Andrew has had another successful summer sailing the Optimist. Andrew is a member of the Wild Harbor Yacht Club in North Falmouth and sails in the red fleet. In the Buzzard Bay Optimist Series, he placed first at the Wild Harbor Yacht Club, first at the Quisset Yacht Club and first at the Chappaquiot Yacht Club with an overall first for the series. WOW! At the New Bedford Junior Regatta, he was third in his fleet and third overall. At the Falmouth Regatta he placed second in his fleet and third overall. He was first in his fleet and first overall at the Hyannis's Regatta. The SMSA Championship was held at Wild Harbor this year and Andrew was second in this fleet and second overall. Andrew's last Regatta for the summer was the Beverly Junior Regatta and he placed first in the red fleet and first overall. Andrew also sailed in the New England Championship in Maine in July and qualified for the National Team Trials in Connecticut in the spring. Unbelievable Andrew, you are quite an amazing sailor!

COLLEGE NEWS

I have quite a bit of College news to report from the spring. Let's start with Syracuse University in New York. Devin Buick of Cohasset made the Dean's List for the 2000 Spring Semester. Devin is a freshman majoring in Geology. Keep up the great work this year Devin!

Boston University awarded quite a few Cohasset residents degrees at its Spring ceremonies. Wade A. Foote received his MA in International Relations. Scott D. Fraser, Heidi S. Kimball and Jeanne Woo all received MBAs in Business Administration and Management. Tammy A. Maitland received her BA in Sociology, cum laude; Andrea Mercurio received her BA in Psychology, magna cum laude and Amie Theriault received her BS in Health Studies. What a great group of achievers, we look forward to hear where you go from here.

Another resident graduated, this one from Syracuse University in New York. Jessica Hurley received her BA in surface pattern design. This sounds wonderful Jessica and I am sure it will do you well. Great Job!

NOBLES' GRADS

The Noble and Greenough School in Dedham graduated two Cohasset students in their Spring ceremonies. Elliot Noon, son of Nick and Connie Noon, graduated and plans to attend Lehigh University in the fall. Elliot earned Academic Honors throughout his three years at Nobles and has done volunteer work repairing and maintaining boats at the Duxbury Bay Marine School. Here, he helped prepare equipment for community sailing programs. Elliot was a class representative for SLC, the School's student government during his senior year, and was a three-sport varsity athlete. He was a lineman on the varsity football team, competed on the varsity downhill ski team and was a member of the varsity rowing team, winning New England Championships in his boat senior year.

Kristin O'Connell, daughter of Michael and Rosemary O'Connell, graduated and plans to attend Boston College in the fall. Kristin earned Academic Honors throughout her four years at Nobles and was a member of Campuses Against Cancer. She was a member of the varsity soccer team and captain of the varsity tennis team her senior year. O'Connell participated in a community service trip to South Africa, where she worked with school children.

Great Job to both Kristin and Elliot!

Kristen O'Connell is a recent Nobles and Greenough graduate.

Elliot Noon is a recent Nobles and Greenough graduate.

CLAMBAKE TIME!

Yahoo. It is Clambake Time! The George H. Mealy Post 118 of the American Legion will sponsor its 18th Annual Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake will be held on Saturday, Sept 9 from noon to sunset at Cohasset's Sandy Beach. Proceeds from the event will once again benefit worthy graduating CHS students seeking higher education. In addition to a traditional New England Clambake featuring lobster, steamed clams, chowder, your favorite beverages and more; this year's event will include live entertainment by The Irish Volunteers, Burke+s Babes and DJ Jay Fiori. Everyone will be invited to compete in Whiffleball, horseshoes, and Volleyball tournaments, as well as three-legged and sack races for the kids. Prizes will be awarded to all the winners. You can also take part in taking a shot at your favorite local politician as each take their turn in the Cold Water Dunk Tank. Auction and raffles of great gifts, donated by local merchants round out the event. Tickets are $30 for adults and must be purchased by Sept 2. Children not eating the clambake are free and there will be plenty of complimentary hotdogs and watermelon for them to enjoy. For tickets or more information, contact the American Legion Post at 383-9657, Neil Murphy at 383-6773 or Scott Arnold at 545-1896. The rain date is scheduled for Sept 10. This sounds like a great way to end the summer and help benefit a wonderful cause! Hope to see you there!

TOUR GUIDE

Skyler Ralston of Cohasset receives a citation from Secretary William F. Galvin for outstanding service as a State House tour guide. Galvin recently hosted the State House Summer Volunteer Luncheon. The event was an opportunity to recognize high school students for their outstanding service as volunteer tour guides this summer.

WELLNESS FAIR

The South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Elder Affairs, Social Services League, and Cohasset Department of Health will hold a Multigenerational Recreation and Wellness Fair on Saturday, Sept 9th from 9 a.m.-2 p.m.. Children can hop on board our Antique Fire Truck and see a real Ambulance. Activities will include Pony Rides, Water Play, Bubble Making, Parachute Time, Finger Games, Face Painting, Chess, Food and Gymnastic Demonstrations, Open Bowling and Ha' Penny Theatre will perform Mr. Bear & Co. Adults can observe Gourmet Cooking Demonstrations, Chowder Fest, Yoga, Blood Pressure Clinic, Foot Care, Hearing, Eye & Osteoporosis Screening, Cholesterol & Glucose, Skin Saver, Oral Cancer and More!

Also, the First Annual Pet Parade is scheduled for this date as well. Get your favorite pet, stuffed or live and join the parade at 12 p.m. on the Cohasset Common. There will be music, a bike portion and lots of fun!

That is all the news for this week. Please send in all your news to jenpiep@yahoo.com or to 622 CJC Highway. You can also call 781-383-1740 and press #3 to leave a message. Have a great week! Jennifer Piepenbrink Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford talks about her years of working along side Molly Hochkeppel, left, who recently retired from the Patriot Ledger. At right is Polly Logan of Cohasset, vice chairman of the state Republican Party, who also presented Hochkeppel with an award from local Republicans. State Sen. Robert Hedlund presented a citation from the governor and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray gave Hochkeppel, who is a registered Democrat, a citation from the House. The presentations occurred during a cookout hosted by the Cohasset Republican Town Committee on Sunday.

Cohasset branch of Boston Conservatory

The Cohasset branch of the Boston Conservatory will hold its annual enrollment Saturday, Sept. 9, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset. This is the second year for this satellite school. The first year proved quite successful with enrollment in piano, organ, voice, strings and band instruments. Summer camp was also available.

This year's offerings are:

• Piano instruction, Dr. Fredrick Guzasky

• Organ instruction on the Aeolian-Skinner Organ of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Dr. Fredrick Guzasky

• String instruction, Ivette Minkina

• Band Instruments, Dr. David Garcia

• Vocal Instruction, Evelyn Czaja

• Gifted Children's Ensemble, Evelyn Czaja

The Gifted Children's Ensemble is new this year. It is a singing ensemble of no more than 12 children between the ages of 10 and 14 who have above-average musical and singing ability. Entrance is by audition only.

The format of this group will consist of a weekly hour-and-a-half rehearsal, which includes music theory, a group voice lesson and study of musical literature for performance in the South Shore area and at the conservatory itself. The season will run from October through May.

For information about enrollment for the 2000 to 2001 season, call either Ms. Czaja at (781) 324-3892 for voice and children's ensemble information or Dr. Guzasky at (781) 397-0963 for organ and other instruments. For further information regarding any of the programs of the Boston Conservatory call (617) 536-6340 Ext. 9119.

Priscilla Daniels resumes piano lessons

Priscilla D. Daniels, professional pianist and teacher of pianoforte, resumes her lesson-schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset. Her personalized instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music of Boston, magna cum laude. She is a member of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society.

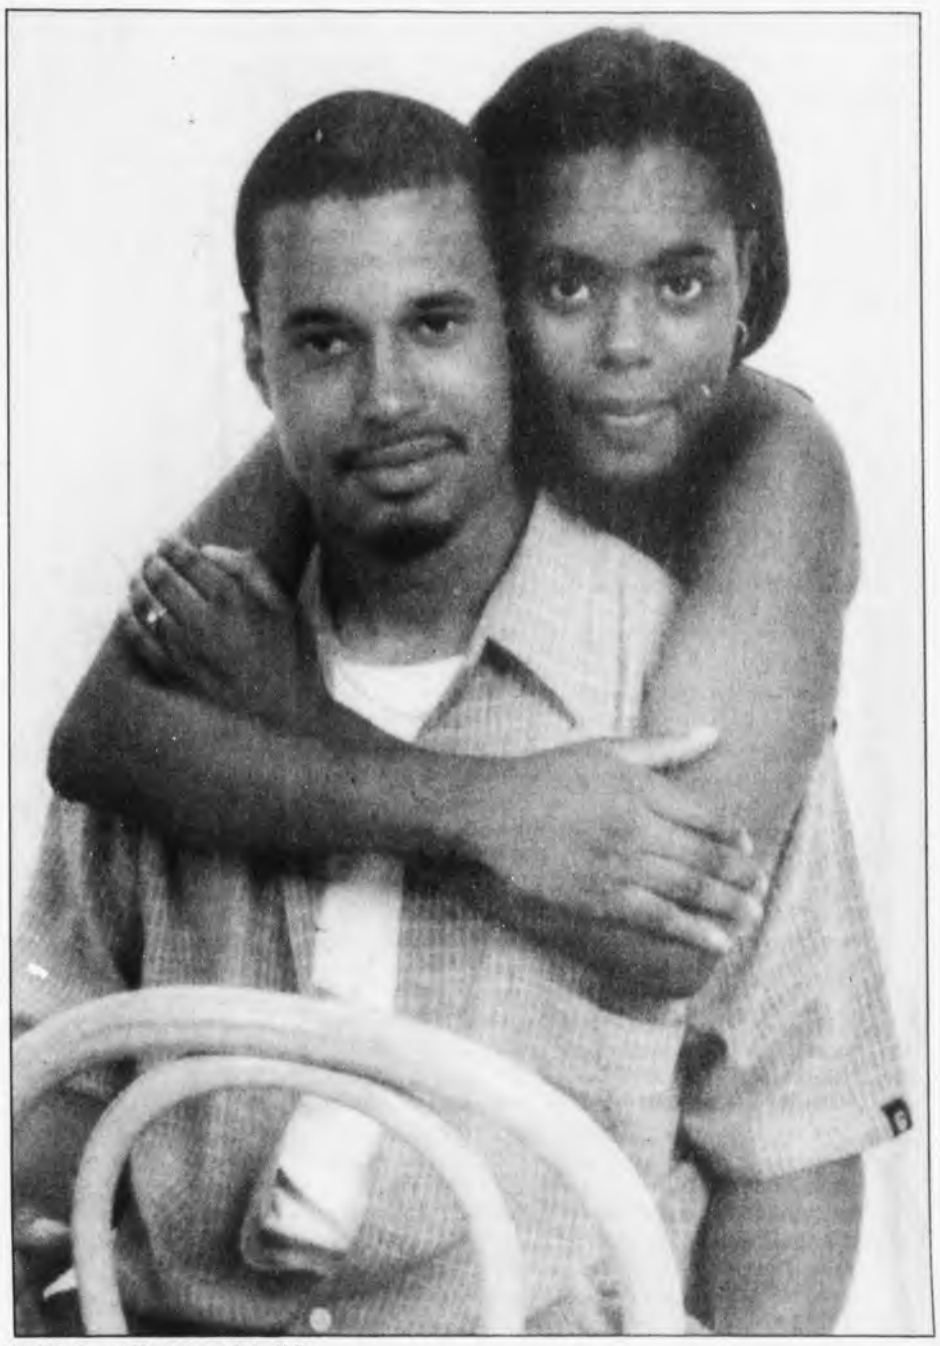
As part of each lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and expression. She encourages her students to improvise and compose, and strives to communicate a love and appreciation for the fine arts through the medium of the piano.

For more information, call 383-1487.

Garage news

Fall hours at The Garage will begin on Friday, Sept. 8, from 6:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. and Saturday's from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m., starting Saturday, Sept. 9.

WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS



Sheldon Tyrone Morgan and Asha Nakia

Williams — Morgan engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Williams announce the upcoming marriage of their daughter, Asha Nakia, to Sheldon Tyrone Morgan. Asha and Sheldon were engaged in December, 1998. Sheldon is the son of Sheldon Jackson of Mattapan and Michelle Avery of Milton.

A Sept. 23, 2000 wedding is planned.

Asha and Sheldon are members of the Cohasset High School Class of 1993. Asha and Sheldon both attended Boston University for two years and graduated from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in 1998. Sheldon is a mechanical engineer with Polaroid in Waltham and Asha is a project manager with CMGI in Andover.

After a honeymoon in St. Thomas, the couple will reside in Lawrence, Mass.

Go safely back to school

School bells are ringing for millions of children around the country as Labor Day approaches. As these youngsters head back to school, educators and health care professionals are encouraging parents and caregivers to look for hidden hazards to help prevent injuries and deaths to children.

The most obvious thing people can do is to be aware of youngsters as they walk or bike to school and wait for the bus, and later when school lets out for the day. Children, preoccupied with school concerns, forget that while they are out on the roads, motorists are dashing to and from work. Take extra precautions while driving around the community as school starts. Above all, slow down.

There are other less obvious hazards besides children waiting for their school buses and walking to and from school. Each year, more than 200,000 children are treated in the nation's hospital emergency rooms for playground-associated injuries. Most of these injuries occur when a child falls from equipment. High risk play areas should be equipped with a 12 inch depth of wood chips, sand or pea gravel. Ideally there should be mats made of safety-tested rubber or fiber material to prevent brain injury if a child does fall.

Is your child riding a bike to school? Make sure he or she is wearing a bike helmet. Every year more than 200 children are killed in bicycle related deaths and 60 percent of these deaths involve brain injury. Helmets can reduce the risk of brain injury by up to 85 percent.

Backpacks are all the rage, but they carry potential risks, too. The improper usage and wear of backpacks can cause serious injury. Physicians say that a fully packed backpack should not exceed 15 percent of a child's body weight. To properly lift a fully loaded backpack, bend at the knees, use both hands to check the weight, and lift with the legs. Do not sling the backpack over one shoulder; always use both shoulder straps and if the backpack has a waist strap, use it. If a child is leaning forward to carry the load, the backpack is overpacked. Lighten the load.

School lunch preparation is another area that should be watched. Be sure food has been stored and packed properly. Before making the lunch, wash hands properly. Do not utilize utensils that have been used to prepare raw meat or other products. Use clean utensils. When preparing a lunch at night, refrigerate the contents of the lunch box before packing the next morning. Periodically clean and sanitize the lunch box.

Tell children that anything in their lunch box that has not been stored properly, that smells or tastes odd, should be discarded.

Children should also be taught to wash their hands before and after eating. Send your child to school with individually wrapped hand wipes to cut down on the risk of contamination and bacteria. Caution children about sharing lunches, especially if they are prone to allergic reactions.

Finally, if you are packing a lunch, toss in easy to package fruits and vegetables. Growing children need nutrients if they are to do their best in school.

Gun violence

TO THE EDITOR:

I note in your Aug. 10 issue the formation of a group to stop handgun violence on the South Shore, as an outcome of the Mothers' Day march in Washington. I hope that this group will come up with solutions that will in fact reduce violence, and not increase it. Let me explain.

Many well intentioned groups have been active over the past few years in promoting legislation that at best is neutral in impact on violence, but often actually encourages it. For example the 1994 Brady law, which mandated background checks and waiting periods for buyers, has had little effect on US homicide rates, according to researchers Jens Ludwig of Georgetown Univ. and Philip Cook of Duke Univ. On the other hand, there are possible downsides for the waiting period, for example, a wife who has been threatened by an estranged husband. During the waiting period, the wife cannot have a gun to defend herself. In fact, since 1994, rape and sexual attacks actually increased in the US.

Every state that has implemented concealed handgun laws has found violent crime to decrease. That's because criminals tend to be bullies, more likely to attack a weaker person (especially a woman) who is known not to be carrying a gun. Gary Kleck, a professor of criminology at Florida State Univ., has written Point Blank:Guns and Violence in America (1991), which provides strong evidence that reducing gun ownership is not a good way to reduce violence. For example, he found that guns are used in self-defense up to three times as often as they are used to commit crimes. In the US during 1974 to 1988, handgun murders dropped by 27 percent, while the number of handguns actually increased 69 percent.

But don't we need more laws to just keep track of gun owners? Well, great care needs to be taken that gun restrictions don't turn into gun confiscation, as happened in Australia, Britain and Canada. The Wall Street Journal reported that the crime rate for burglary in America is now substantially less than Australia, Britain and Canada. Incidentally, a court recently ruled that self-incrimination laws prevent criminals from being prosecuted for unregistered guns, so the registration laws only apply to law abiding citizens.

And, speaking of violence, we all know that totalitarians love gun control. Gun control was established in Turkey (1911),the Soviet Union (1929), China (1935), Germany (1938), Cambodia (1956), Guatemala (1964), and Uganda (1970). In each case, massacres followed. The total exterminated by these countries in the 20th Century is estimated at 56 million; in each case, the people could not defend themselves. Of course, this could not happen here.

An yet, we should do whatever we can to reduce violence in our society. Since children (and even some adults) take their values from what they observe, perhaps the most effective approach would be to cut back on the violence (with and without guns) that occurs in our music and on our TVs. Now, if the South Shore gun violence group would take that mission on, I would be in full support.

Jet noise nightmare

TO MARY JEANETTE MURRAY AND BOB HEDLUND:

Please help us immediately! We are being invaded by landing jets every night now. It has nothing to do with wind direction, weather, etc. It is all political. A recent decision by the FAA and Massport has directed all night flights to land on runway 33. As you know this so called over the water landing is directly over our homes. This is every night now. This past Sunday morning at 1:30 a.m. a huge cargo plane was landing directly over our home. The landing lights were lighting up our room. The sound was so loud that the house was vibrating. It was so upsetting. It took 25 minutes for the Massport complaint line to record my call. The man was not even going to take my address down. I don't think anything is done with the complaints.

This is not the first time but it was one of the lowest and loudest I have ever heard. We (the town of Hingham and the South Shore) need steps taken right now with these current problems. We also need to demand that someone from the South Shore be on the Blue Ribbon Comm. lead by Massport's Virginia Buckingham. This process needs to be stopped now and started from scratch with a proper team set up from the South Shore. Please start this process now!

We currently have planes flying over our house no matter what flight patterns are in effect. No other area gets no break in the noise from Logan. Every other community at least gets some relief during the day or night. From 6 a.m. every day (no need for alarm clock anymore) until about midnight there is constant noise from between one plane every minute to at the most 3 minutes. These are typically take-offs. Then after midnight we now have planes landing over our house off and on until morning. This is no joke! No one should be subject to this amount of noise. Please help now.

Village jump-start

TO MR. THOMAS CALLAHAN:
CHAIRMAN COHASSET BD. OF SELECTMEN

I am writing as a Cohasset resident to commend the efforts of Mr. Roy and Mr. Ordelheide concerning the revitalizing of the downtown and harbor areas.

I feel that the articles I have been reading about in the papers have had a negative tone to them.

I am acquainted with both of these men well enough to know that instead of self-serving interests as implied by the newspapers these men genuinely love Cohasset, and are only striving to make it a better place to live for all of us.

It is my opinion that with town approvals, this is just the jump-start we need to help keep local businesses downtown and Cohasset as the jewel of the South Shore.

John G. Naughton
174 Linden Dr.

Editor's note: This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

School doctor

TO THE EDITOR:

He will probably be mad at me for putting this in the paper, but I am going to do it anyway. On behalf of Cohasset High school's administration, the school nurse, the athletic department and most importantly our student-athletes, I would like to thank Dr. Steve Golden for volunteering his time on the evening of Thursday, Aug. 24, to provide free physicals for our high school student-athletes.

In order to participate in the high school athletic program, students are required to have a physical exam prior to the first practice. Dr. Golden performed 47 physical exams, which is roughly 25 percent of our student-athletes. Steve, we at the high school want the community to know how much we appreciate you.

We also would like to thank Dr. Sceery for all the years of service as our school physician and wish him a speedy recovery.

Register for scouts

Town wide Boy Scout and Girl Scout registration will be held at the Deer Hill School Café on Tuesday, Sept.12 from 6:30-8 p.m.

Boy Scout registration includes all boys interested in joining Tiger Cubs (first grade), Cub Scouts (second –fifth grade), and Boy Scouts (sixth grade and up).If there are any questions please call Jane Long for Tiger Cubs-383-1281 and Linda Farrag for Cub Scouts-383-9519.

Girls may join Daisies (kindergarten), Brownies (first-third grade), Juniors (fourht-sixth grade), Cadettes (seventh–ninth grade) and Seniors (10th –12th grade).

Registration fee for Girl Scouts is $7, and a parent's signature is required on all forms.

Adults are needed to lead troops, especially at the Junior fourth-grade level. Any parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles or former Scout leaders, who might be interested in becoming a leader or have any questions, please call Terry James (evenings 383-9173). The Cohasset Service Unit is also looking for positions to be filled on its Service Team. These positions include a Family Partnership chairman and a Girl Scout coordinator. If you are interested in either of these positions, please contact Nancy Bartlett at the Dedham Field Office at 1(800)637-0070.

LIBRARY CORNER

Summer party

On Thursday, Aug. 17, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library celebrated its summer reading program by hosting a "Make-your-own-Sundae" party. Entertainment was provided by Michael Scott Astley of Once Upon a Time, who told and illustrated an original story. Approximately 30 people attended the party. The winner of the contest to guess how many fish in the jar was Blain at 383-1941, who can pick up his prize at the library.

Summer readers announced

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, announced that a total of 85 children participated in this summer's "Open Books, Open Frontier," reading program.

Children from grades one and up who participated are listed alphabetically with siblings: Francesca Astino, Johanna Brophy, Andrew Burnett, Alexandra Butler, Jenny Cahill, Laura and Melissa Campedelli, Julia Canney, Dana Childs, Leigh and Paige Collins and Queenan Conor.

Also, Cameron Cope, Alison and Amy Costa, Courtney and EJ Culhane, Travers Craven, Adrian Dunne, Patrick Dunn, Amanda and Nicole Farren, Abby Faulkner, Andrew and Stephanie Fewsmith and Erin Fontaine.

Also, Samantha and Sydney Fortin, Sam Game, Hazel Gammad, Hilary Gaumer, Aisling Guinee, Sara Gursky, Anna and Carla Haggerty, Lesen Haracz, Gus and Rudy Helbock.

Also, Claire, Patrick and Peter Herlin, Coleman and David Hernon, Lindsay Hill, Katie Hillman, Brendan Horigan, Kyla Hospod, Natalie Hunt, Thomson and Whitney Jaffe, Stacey Laughlin, Sarah Libby, Samantha Liberty and Andrew and Rachel Littauer.

Also, Kerry McCabe, Max MacCleave, Charlotte and Sarah Malone, Sarah Mavilia, Michael and Kristin Monaco, Polly and Wis Murray, Tatyana Nakashima, Caitlin and Kevin O'Connell and Megan Parnell.

Also, Hannah Rawson, Jodi Rosano, Colleen and Tom Ryan, Christine and Nick Secatore, Ivan Secery, Anna and Mark Seraikas, Amber Silvia, Kaye Slamp, Matthew Swanborg, Amanda and Julia Thompson, Jamie Timothy, Michela Valente and Zoe Whilton.

Old photos

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is seeking old photographs showing the original cupola that was on the Joseph Osgood School. The architects need a model on which to base their design for restoration. If you have an old photo that you could lend or donate to the library, phone Library Director Janet Husband at 383-1348.

MBTA land takings for Greenbush imminent

LOCAL VIEW

JEFFREY A. TOCCHIO

The MBTA's settlement with the Town of Hingham brings the Greenbush Restoration Project one step closer to reality. Many steps remain, however, before service operations are restored. One significant step, which should occur shortly, will be a determination by the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority as to which parcels of privately-owned property it will take for the project under its power of eminent domain.

This article is intended to familiarize readers with the basic laws and procedures governing eminent domain takings, and the legal responsibility of the MBTA to award full and just compensation for damages resulting to landowners when land is taken. While an understanding of eminent domain law and procedures will not prevent land from being taken, it should allow a landowner to maximize participation in the process, and ideally to maximize the amount of mitigation and the amount of compensation available under law.

Eminent domain is the power held by government, and authorized agencies or authorities, to take rights in real property, either permanently or temporarily, for a valid public purpose. Eminent domain takings can range from the taking of the ownership of an entire property, to temporary easement takings of a portion of a property to allow entry for a period of time by MBTA contractors. Generally, takings of entire properties by the MBTA often are of large sites planned as parking areas and stations. Temporary takings may involve limited areas where construction crews or equipment are allowed entry to private land over a defined period of time, commonly three years. There are numerous other types of takings, examples of which include permanent slope or wall easements, where earth grading is performed or wall is constructed and will remain, to a permanent drainage easement, where drainage water is discharged onto land.

The process

The MBTA works with its engineers and consultants to determine which eminent domain takings will be made. This is an evolving process, and currently only limited proposed takings are depicted on the MBTA's Draft Mitigation Plans made available to the public in the Fall of 1999. Once the extent of the takings is determined more fully, the MBTA will then hire real estate appraisers, paid by the MBTA, to appraise property damages caused by the takings. Typically, two appraisers will submit appraisals to a review appraiser hired by the MBTA, who will make a recommendation regarding the payment of damages. The appraisers are required under the professional appraisal standards to contact each property owner, and to give that owner an opportunity to provide information concerning the property being appraised.

The actual written MBTA appraisals (and the review appraisal) are not provided to property owners by the MBTA. Further, they are specifically exempted from the definition of "public records" under General Laws ch. 4, sec. 7. Thus, a property owner has no ability to determine whether full and adequate damages were awarded by the MBTA, or to compare the MBTA's method of determining their damages with the method used to award damages to other landowners.

The MBTA must either obtain the consent of the owner of the property before making a taking or provide 30 day advance notice to the owner of its intent to make a taking. The MBTA board will, at or about this time, vote the taking and the awards to be paid. An Order of Taking will be drawn, which must be recorded within 30 days with the registry of deeds of every county in which the land taken lies. For example, an Order of Taking which purports to take a parcel of land which lies partially in Hingham, and partially in Cohasset, will be recorded in both the Plymouth and Norfolk registries.

Pro Tanto payment

Once a properly prepared and executed Order of Taking is filed with the Registry of Deeds, the taking has occurred, and a landowner's right to damages vests. Where the MBTA has determined that damages are payable as a result of the taking, a pro tanto damage award will be made to the record owner of the property taken within 60 days of the recording of the Order of Taking. The term "pro tanto" translates roughly to "for the time being," or "for now," and is a payment of damages based on an appraisal prepared for the MBTA.

The landowner is entitled to accept and keep the pro tanto award without releasing the MBTA from liability to pay the property owner a greater amount of damages. Thus, where a property owner receives a pro tanto payment, he or she may: 1. Accept the pro tanto, and do nothing to seek further damages; or 2. Accept the pro tanto, and seek a determination of the true measure of damages caused by the taking, including the harm caused to any remaining property of the owner caused by the taking or the Greenbush restoration project. The second option, which requests ultimately that a jury of ordinary citizens visit the site, and listen to evidence of damages, must be exercised within three years following the recording of the Order of Taking.

Just compensation

While there are numerous variations regarding the types and extent of potential eminent domain takings, one thing remains constant: the landowner must receive "just compensation" for the property taken. This obligation to pay just compensation is a matter of state constitutional law and is also guaranteed in the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Where an entire property is taken, just compensation is equal to the fair market value of the property on the date of the recording of the Order of Taking. In Massachusetts, fair market value is defined as the "highest" price which a hypothetical willing buyer would pay to a hypothetical willing seller in an assumed free and open market. Where a part or a portion of a property is taken, the law requires that an owner receive damages for the value of the land actually taken, referred to as "direct damages," and also the loss in value to the remaining property of the owner caused by either the taking, or the public project for which the taking was made. This resulting loss in value to the remainder, referred to as "consequential damages," is highly subjective, and is often the cause of intense disagreement in the measure of damages between the property owner and the MBTA. Partial taking cases are often referred to as "before and after" cases, because the measure of damages is often expressed as "the difference between the value of the property before the taking, and the value of the property after the taking, considering fully the public project."

In all takings, the MBTA's original pro tanto appraisal is performed before the takings are made, and the appraiser does not have the opportunity to see, hear, feel, taste or smell the procession of diesel-powered locomotive engines and cars which will pass by homes and businesses. Rather, the pro tanto appraisal is based on assumptions provided by the paying client, the MBTA, regarding noise, vibration, air-quality, hours of operation, mitigation success, and a host of other factors. Once the pro tanto payments are made, the MBTA will not reassess damages unless forced to do so by a land owner.

As stated previously, a landowner may recover compensation only if some portion of his or her land is "taken," either permanently or temporarily. However, Massachusetts law recognizes limited circumstances where damages may be recoverable by a property owner whose land was not taken. These cases are limited to project-related damages which are special and peculiar to a property. Examples include situations where access to the road system has been eliminated, or where the effects of the project deprive a property owner of all or most of his interest in the property. Such instances are fact-specific, and should be assessed in light of numerous reported Massachusetts cases, some which allow compensation, and others which do not.

Superior Court

Massachusetts law provides a procedure under which a land owner whose land has been taken is entitled to file an action in Superior Court which asks a jury of citizens to determine the fair measure of damages resulting from a taking. Under this procedure, both the land owner and the MBTA are allowed to show the property at issue to a jury of ordinary citizens, and to present evidence concerning damages, including appraisals, and other expert evidence, such as sound and vibration experts. Where a portion of a property is taken, the jury view should include observation of the public project for which the taking was made – in the case of Greenbush, the operation of the rail line.

Recent eminent domain cases against the MBTA resulting from the Old Colony Line restoration have resulted in settlements and jury awards which significantly exceed the original pro tanto awards. Each taking must, of course, be evaluated to determine whether the pro tanto paid by the MBTA provides full and just compensation.

What's in a name? A lot of money

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When the New England Patriots take the field for the 2002 NFL season, they'll be playing on the hallowed turf of College Market Group, Inc., Stadium, or CMGI Field, as we who have followed football for years have learned to call it.

That's because CGMI, an 11 billion (that's with a "b") dollar company in Andover whom no one but a student of the business page ever heard of before, will be paying $7.6 million a year for the next 15 years, or $120 million.

At the going rate for football players, that will buy the Pats a second rate running back and, by the year 2002, it will be enough to pay a backup quarterback or a fourth string wide receiver or a ball boy, whichever comes first.

For its money, I am told, CGMI will get its name mentioned in public 2.6 billion times a year and sales will rocket — if anyone ever finds out what it sells.

"By partnering with the Patriots and the NFL, the number one sports league in the world in terms of marketing, we are obtaining an unmatched brand-awareness opportunity," said CGMI CEO David Wetherell.

Wetherell will also get to sit with Pats' President Bob Kraft at football games and maybe even get to go into the dressing room after a game and slap a 300-pound lineman on the bare fanny with a wet towel, if that goes with the territory.

It's getting so that you can't build a stadium or hold a football bowl game or a golf tournament without corporate help. So far, the practice hasn't extended to residences, but I'm open to renaming my house if the price is right.

Actually, it could have been worse. One of those companies vying with CMGI to throw millions at the Patriots was Monster.com, an Internet job recruitment and career management site. Monster.com Field? Wow!

On reflection, though, maybe Monster.com could recruit a running back to tighten things up for Drew Bledsoe.

It's getting so that you can't build a stadium or hold a football bowl game or a golf tournament without corporate help. So far, the practice hasn't extended to residences, but I'm open to renaming my house if the price is right.

The Baltimore Ravens play football in something called PS/Net Stadium, whose "brand awareness" is not yet unmatched. Fruit of the Loom pays for the right to name the Miami Dolphins' playpen but fortunately chose to call it "Pro Player Stadium," the name of one of its underwear brands.

The Boston Bruins and Celtics play in the Fleet Center (named for the financial corporation, not the enema) and, in Washington, it's FedEx Field, for which Federal Express is on the hook for a record $205 million for 27 years.

Corporate sponsorship in sports is nothing new, of course, dating back to the days when the Copeland Springs Bottling Company bought uniforms and baseballs for a West Quincy baseball team called the Copelands and Plymouth Cordage and the Taunton Lumber Company did the same.

That practice hasn't reached the major leagues yet, although the NHL's Mighty Ducks of Anaheim, named for a Disney movie, comes mighty close. After all, Disney owns both the team and the motion picture.

And old time hockey fans can recall when Buffalo had a minor league team whose players skated around with a can of Pepsi sewn to the front of their jerseys.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley outlines his priorities for seniors

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley released his platform today of legislative priorities on issues affecting senior citizens. His agenda includes a strong focus on affordable health care and lower prescription drug costs for seniors, fraud prevention, lower property taxes and water rates, and home heating assistance for seniors on fixed incomes.

As state representative, Bradley will fight to repair our health care system so that affordable health care is available to all, prescription drug costs are lowered, and a Patients' Bill of Rights is implemented. Bradley has explored viable health care options, such as the Heinz HOPE Plan, which provides affordable health care coverage for all seniors, and on-line prescription drug services that will help remedy the rising costs of necessary prescriptions for seniors.

"As State Representative, I will support legislation which enacts a state-wide bulk prescription purchasing program to ease the burden of costs on seniors," stated Bradley. The State has a variety of programs that begin to address the prescription drug cost problem, but Bradley supports the HOPE model because it brings these programs together in order to keep costs down, provide better service, and cover more Massachusetts residents.

As a former assistant district attorney, Bradley fought to protect seniors and working families from fraud. By using public forums to provide information to seniors on how to detect fraud, Bradley worked to expose telemarketing fraud and help seniors keep what is theirs. As State Representative, Bradley will work to tighten and enforce legislation that penalizes those companies and individuals who take advantage of and deceive seniors.

Holden says voters will cross party lines

Scores of Republicans have filed change of enrollment cards with the Hingham Town Clerk's Office in order to vote for Mike Holden, a Democratic candidate for State Representative, in the primary election on Sept. 19.

Former Republican Jim Dellot explained, "In the eight years that I've watched Mike in Town Government, I've always been impressed with his willingness to take a position, whether I agreed with him on that particular issue or not. When he spoke in favor of rebuilding our schools, for instance, it was not because of party affiliation, but because he truly believed it was the right thing to do." The school rebuilding program at times became a divisive issue in town.

"People responded very positively to my willingness to take on a controversial issue, Holden said. "When I was later elected selectman, I worked with members of both parties on a financial plan that translated into millions of dollars in savings to Hingham's taxpayers. That's something Democrats and Republicans alike are pleased with. I never concerned myself with what party these people belonged to. We were able to improve our bond rating on two separate occasions, restructure existing debt and ultimately created a stabilization fund to directly offset the increasing tax burden on our residents. These are the sort of things that people have responded so positively to, regardless of their party," Holden explained. "I am honored that so many people have actually changed parties to support my candidacy," he added.

McKenna seeks balance

Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for state representative held a fund-raiser last Thursday at the American Legion Hall in Cohasset. During the event, which was attended by many supporters including friends, family and legion members, McKenna spoke about the need for a balanced Legislature.

"The Senate and House of Representatives are dominated by male, Democratic attorneys. Is there no room for a Republican woman who cares about family values? Various societal groups deserve to be represented on Beacon Hill, not simply those in the legal profession," she said.

McKenna went on to state her position on various issues concerning the 3rd Plymouth District, including the redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Base. "When we think about new construction on the South Shore, we must first investigate need. Do we need another mall? No. Do we need an additional 60,000 car trips a day clogging our roadways? Absolutely not! What we do need is a facility that will generate high-paying jobs combined with substantial tax revenue. It's time for the South Shore to create a high-tech "hot-spot" like the one we see on Route 128. A high-tech or clinical research facility would fit the bill."

To learn more about the McKenna campaign or to get involved, call Paul Alciere at 749-5537, or visit the Citizens for McKenna web site at www.mamckenna.org.

"I've done it at town meetings for the last eight years. I've done it at the Statehouse on issues impacting the area, and I do it in my private practice," said Holden, a partner in the Hingham law firm Holden & Feeney.

Both candidates have enjoyed their time walking the district's streets, and say they are encouraged by the response they have received.

"That's the greatest thing about running for a [local seat such as state representative]. You can go to everyone's house, just about. You don't have to rely on the media picking up your message... You get to go out and meet a good amount of people," said Bradley, noting he has received a positive response during his travels. "People have been happy to take time to talk to me, and sometimes I'm not always knocking at the best time. But people have been very receptive.

"I'm a little bit more tired this time, but maybe that's just me getting older," joked the 30-year-old Bradley.

"I do enjoy getting out," said Holden, 35. "Some day, somebody's going to have to do a documentary [on going door-to-door]. Some days it's hilarious. Everyone's got a million stories.

"The response has been very encouraging," Holden added. "We were very confident going into Hingham given my involvement here, and I found very quickly that Hull and Cohasset are also very encouraging."

The debate, which will be moderated by Nancy Carapazza, state president of the League of Women Voters, will begin at 7 p.m., and is expected to last approximately an hour. The two candidates will be asked questions by a panel of journalists, including Cohasset Mariner and Hingham Journal editor Mary Ford, former Cohasset cable TV host Wigmore Pierson, and WATD news director Aaron Katersky. A segment of the debate will be devoted to questions from the audience as well as from our the newspaper's website (townonline.com/south).

The event will be broadcast live on WATD, and taped for showing on local community access channels.

"We are grateful to the League of Women Voters who have assisted us in presenting this forum in a professional manner," said Mark Skala, CNC's south region editor-in-chief. "We are pleased to be able to sponsor such a forum that will allow community residents to have an opportunity to make an informed choice on Sept. 19." The newspaper is also working with the Hingham League of Women Voters.

The winner of the primary will face Republican Mary Anne McKenna, who is unopposed, and independent candidate Walter Murray in the general election Nov. 7.

Robinson has high hopes for South Shore

Shore, in Duxbury, Plymouth. I went to Hull a lot as a kid," said Robinson in an exclusive interview with the Mariner. "I spent a lot of time as a kid when I was growing up here. I feel more comfortable here than anywhere else."

Robinson's goal is to visit all 351 towns and cities in Massachusetts. He said as of Sunday, he had already reached the one-third mark, and so far the reception has "been excellent. We've gotten a great reception everywhere we've gone."

For Robinson, a lawyer and businessman, any type of positive reception is good, after the start his campaign had. His announcement to challenge Kennedy, whom most people consider unbeatable, was met with surprised silence, even from his own party. Republican Gov. Paul Cellucci has yet to endorse him. Robinson told the crowd his relationship with the governor is similar to the relationship between North and South Korea: they're on speaking terms and no gunfire is being exchanged. Just days after announcing, the Boston daily newspapers were filled with stories of domestic violence, restraining orders, a drunk-driving arrest, and a lawsuit for plagiarism. Robinson subsequently released the "Robinson Report" which addressed the accusations — the restraining order was obtained by an ex-girlfriend and all charges were eventually dismissed; his blood-alcohol level was well below the legal limit and though he was arrested, he was never charged with drunk driving; the lawsuit for plagiarism was the result of a misunderstanding.

To make things worse, he needed a state Supreme Judicial Court ruling to get his name on the ballot because some of the signatures were questioned. Then his car was "rear-ended" while he was doing a radio interview while driving, and most recently, on Saturday, he was pulled over for speeding in Connecticut.

"Things happen in life," Robinson said, adding he feels his campaign has been on the upswing since the court's decision allowing him on the ballot. "You need to roll with the punches and move forward."

He also wasn't afraid of reaffirming his earlier statement that if his past becomes an issue during the campaign, he won't have any reservations about making Kennedy's past an issue as well.

Robinson jumped at the opportunity to appear at the cookout. To him, Cohasset and the South Shore will be an important district for his campaign. "Cohasset is a strong Republican area, as is most of the South Shore. It's going to be a big area for us."

Though he currently is out campaigning in the western part of the state, he hopes to travel through the region during primary time. About that time, Robinson says he will announce his formal positions on the issues. He says he is familiar with the ongoing debate about redevelopment of the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station, but admits not knowing all the details.

"People really aren't interested in issues before Labor Day except for the hard-core politicos. I'm mostly just putting a name with the face, introducing myself, and handing out bumper stickers and signs and buttons...We'll get to the issues after Labor Day," he said.

As far as his upcoming fight, Robinson will steal a strategy from an unlikely source — Kennedy's brother John F. Kennedy. "We're going to be running a very unconventional campaign," Robinson explained. "Part of the problem Mitt Romney [who lost to Kennedy in 1994] had made was trying to go barrel to barrel with Ted Kennedy, and you can't do that. We're going to run a guerilla campaign, just like John F. Kennedy did against Henry Cabot Lodge in 1952, and we're going to beat him."

Robinson's headquarters won't be located in a building, instead, it will be run through his website: www.robinson2000.com

Through his website, interested voters are able to access a biography and positions on issues.

He also said there will be debates, once the primaries are finished.

But the biggest question that might arise, is why Massachusetts residents should elect Robinson, when the state is already represented by one of the most influential people in the country.

Simple, says Robinson, because the U.S. Senate will more than likely, in his opinion, remain under Republican control. Robinson feels he will yield more influence as a freshman Republican, than Kennedy, a 38-year member of the Senate. "And if Bush is president, even more so," he added.

Bush for President signs and buttons were no strangers to the cookout. Jamie Bush's daughter, Sarah, a high school senior at Deerfield Academy, sported a "W stands for women" button, and was more than happy to add some articulate thoughts on her famous cousin.

But the main focus of the rally was on local elections. In his remarks, Hedlund said party help is needed to keep his seat Republican. Marshfield residents Ted LeClair and Jim Cantwell are battling for the right to face Hedlund in the Nov. 7 election and Hedlund said he is in for a "gang fight."

Murray, who is stepping down after 26 years in the state legislature, gave her final speech as an elected official, at the cookout. Murray said she "hated to step down" but thanked everyone that supported her over the years. And in an unofficial passing of the torch, Murray introduced McKenna, who will have not only Democratic opposition in November [from either Mike Holden or Garrett Bradley] but also independent candidate Walter Murray.

The message sent by the speakers, but particularly town committee chairman Janet Fogarty, was all types of support is needed, whether it is financial donations, or just volunteering to hold a sign for a candidate.

The state primary is Sept. 19.

DEBATE

The Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner will be hosting a Primary Debate on Thursday, September 7, between Democrats Garrett Bradley and Michael Holden, who are seeking the state representative seat, currently held by longtime incumbent, Mary Jeanette Murray.

The two are vying for their party's nomination to face off against a Republican and Independent in the November election. The Debate, to be moderated by the League of Women Voters, will begin at 7 p.m. at the Cohasset Lightkeepers Residence on Cohasset Harbor. A panel of journalists will question the candidates.

CHS gridders look to build on '99 progress

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Are you ready for some football?!

Copyright infringements aside, it looks like this looks like followers of South Shore League football are going to be in for quite a show this fall.

Norwell has played in three consecutive Super Bowls and should again be among the SSL's top teams this time around, but have been hit hard by graduation, so there remain many questions. Many believe that Carver, with several league all-stars back, has the best shot of dethroning the three time champs. Of course, Abington is also returning quite a few starters, and Cohasset has shown steady improvement over Tony Rolfe's two seasons. Then there is Hanover, with a new coach, but still the same team that somehow always manages to make noise in the SSL.

South Shore League-1999 Final Standings

	overall	league
Norwell	8-2-1	6-0
Carver	8-2	5-1
Abington	4-4-2	3-2-1
Hanover	4-6	3-3
Cohasset	3-6-1	2-3-1
Norton	2-7-1	1-5
Hull	1-7-2	0-4-2

Cohasset's Tony Rolfe was pleased with the progress his team showed with last year's 3-6-1 (2-3-1 in league) campaign, and sees no reason why that trend won't continue.

"This will be the first year where I honestly feel like we're building on something," said Rolfe, entering his third season as the Skippers head coach. "In the first year, our main focus was putting our system in, and then last year we were hit hard by graduations. This year we have a lot of returning starters, and I'd be surprised if we weren't a lot better."

Among the returnees are co-captains Brian Krupczak, a key runner in '99, and Craig Davis, a third year starter on both the offensive and defensive lines. In addition, for the first time in his three years, Rolfe returns a starting quarterback in junior Jason Brown. The team also gets back most of their starters up front on both sides of the ball.

Rolfe goes along with the general consensus that Carver appears to be the cream of the crop in the SSL, but adds that he also likes Hanover and Norwell.

"I don't think there are going to be many easy games in the league this year," said Rolfe, who will open camp with his team on Thursday. "And I think we're going to be one of those teams that's going to be right

Cohasset Soccer Club thanks coaches for making a difference

An open letter from Cohasset Soccer Club President, Wallace St. John, to all coaches:

On behalf of the board, I would like to thank you for the investment you made in the development of the players and program this year. I can assure each of you that you made a real difference. The program has grown by more than fifty percent in the past three years, topping 695 players this spring and truly has developed a "life" of it's own.

Some of the new initiatives that YOU made possible were:

1) A four-week high school boot camp in August to prepare the private and public school players for the fall season. The varsity boys went into the playoffs for the first time in many years.

2) The club was able to add two teams to replace those lost due to funding cuts in the middle school last fall. It was a difficult start, but turned into a successful program offering mid week practices with professional coaches and Saturday games. We were able to assure that every player of any ability had a place to play.

3) A new program for the 5th and 6th grade under 12 divisions. We spent three weeks in the fall teaching them to play 11 versus 11 full-field and then entered them in the Cranberry League to play against other towns for five weeks, preparing them for the spring season.

One of the boys teams went on in the spring to make the playoffs and win the Coastal League becoming the best team in their 15 town division of the 42 teams that started in April. They went on to the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions (MTOC) playing at UMASS Amherst in June. They did not win but received a great honor in being selected for the "good sportsmanship award".

4) Consolidating all of our teams at Miliken-Bancroft Fields. This included the Kinder-Kickers. This fall, they will play at 9:00 am and the professional coaches with their coaches will lead their skills development.

5) The "futsal" (indoor soccer program) was a tremendous success in the first year and I hope to continue next winter if we are able to acquire the gym space needed. We should be able to grow the developmental winter program when the additional gymnasiums are added at the Deer Hill School and Middle-High Schools in the future.

6) Three teams Boys Under 12,

SPORTS NOTES

Fall sports physical exams/user's fee

Cohasset High's Acting Athletic Director Rond Ford reminds reminds all fall sports candidates that they need to have a physical before they are allowed to participate in interscholastic athletic activities.

If you were unable to take advantage of the physicals offered at the middle school last week, you will need to be examined by your family physician. The physician's report must be presented to the school nurse, stating the student is in good physical condition to participate in the sport. If there is going to be a problem making the school physical time, call Ron Ford at 781-383-6103 to make other arrangements.

Student athletes are also reminded that they must bring their $75 sports user's fee to the first practice. If there are questions or problems, again, please call Ron Ford.

No student will be allowed to begin practice until he/she has had a physical examination and paid $75 user's fee or made other arrangements.

Crew Team Begins Practice

Cohasset Maritime Institute is pleased to announce that it will be sponsoring a high school crew team to compete in the open water rowing races held this Fall throughout New England. Students interested in participating in this sport should contact Jack Buckley at 383-8261. Practice will start the week of August 14.

Cohasset Youth Soccer raffle

The Cohasset Youth Soccer League is sponsoring a raffle to raise funds for the fall 2000 and Spring 2001 town soccer programs. The club is raffling a classic 1966 Ford Mustang Convertible. Tickets are $5.00 each or 3 for $10.00.

Winners will be announced on Tuesday, September 5, 2000, outside Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Street. The winner need not be present to win. Maximum number of tickets available for sale is eight thousand (8,000).

To request tickets, get facts about the car and see a color photograph, visit www.mustangraffle.cjb.net. Or call 781-383-7017. You must be 18 years of age to participate.

EASTERN MASS OFFICIAL

It's that time of year again. Everyone seems to be getting ready for the fall sports seasons. However, teams aren't the only groups preparing.

Game officials must also get ready. Those folks we all love to hate are doing their own preparations. They are holding classes, reading their rule books, doing conditioning drills and working scrimmages. These are people who have a respect and love for the sports they work and an enjoyment of maintaining contact with the kids and the games. They attend meetings every week, starting a few weeks before the season and going right through to the end of the season. These sessions help certified officials maintain their proficiency.

They also are responsible for recruiting and training new officials. There is always a need for new people. Many sports (lacrosse for example) are growing in popularity and in the number of teams involved. If you have given some thought to maintaining contact with sports that you love, officiating may be something you'd enjoy.

Football, for example, is about to start their candidates certification classes. These classes consist of 8-10 weeks of classroom training, which takes the class through all 10 rules and through the various on-field mechanics of officiating.

There is a certification exam at the end of the training. Once a person passes the exam, he/she is certified to officiate Massachusetts High School football. Massachusetts is one of just two states in the nation to use NCAA rules, while the other 48 use "Federation" rules.

If you have interest in officiating football, there are five boards in Eastern Massachusetts. They all run classes. The contacts are:

- Cap Cod - Dan Murphy (508-540-4442)
- Southeastern Mass, which meets in Taunton - Tom Casciato (508-697-0153)
- Eastern Mass, which meets in Braintree - Frank Pumphret (781-545-2536)
- New England, which meets in Malden - Bill Scally (781-224-2404)

there in every game with a chance to win."

The third year coach should get a pretty good indication early on of how valid that assessment is, having scheduled his team's Sept. 8 opener against perennial powerhouse Arch-Bishop Williams in a non-conference match-up.

"That game should be a good test for us and should toughen us up some before we get into the league schedule," he said.

Norwell

Of all the coaches in the South Shore League, Jim Sullivan obviously has the most to live up to. After all, his Norwell team has gone to the Super Bowl in each of the last three seasons, winning it all in '97 and '98 but falling in a heartbreaker last December to Bishop Fenwick, 28-26.

His most pressing matter of business will be to find replacements for six key players, all of them 1999 South Shore League All Stars and multi-year starters, among them quarterback Jim Lewis.

"We'll have our work cut out for us this year," assessed the 12th year had coach. "Carver looks like they could be loaded, and Abington has a great group of seniors."

Although Sullivan is a realist, he is also a believer in the theory that winning in athletic competition is as much psychological as it is physical, and he is quick to point out that he likes the mental makeup of his team.

"I have a team full of guys that have never known what it's like not to be in superbowl," noted Sullivan, who coached his team to an perfect 6-0 record in South Shore League play last year (8-2-1, overall). "I do believe that winning breeds winning."

As for the physical aspect, Sullivan feels he has solid candidates to replace his graduated stalwarts.

"Overall, I think we have a decent core of returning talent. We may not have the firepower we had in the last few years, but I think we have some kids here who are quite capable of stepping up and doing some pretty good things of their own."

Sullivan is also hopeful that his captains— Josh Ewart, Mike Gilraine, and Mike Mohan— will help the less experienced players over the inevitable hurdles.

"I think those three are going to provide us with quality leadership, and set the example for what is expected in a winning program," offered Sullivan.

Carver

But for one mishandled ball, Carver players would be the ones talking about their trip to the Super Bowl and defending the South Shore League crown right now rather than their counterparts in Norwell. Carver had but one loss in the league last year, a 16-15 gut wrenching loss to the Clippers that turned on a safety in the game's final moments.

This year they looked primed to avenge that loss.

"This team looks like it could be my strongest ever," assessed Carver's fifth year head coach Mike Fracalossi, not shying away from the pre-season prognostications.

The Crusaders return eight starters, including League All-stars in full-back Chris Villanueve, J.T. Eakins, who is making the jump from half-back to quarterback this year, and tight end/inside linebacker Jason Kingston, a Division 1 collegiate prospect.

The Crusaders biggest hole is up front, where they lost two starters to graduation. However, Fracalossi feels he has the talent to fill those slots and keep his high octane running game clicking on all cylinders, which, in addition to Villanueve and Eakins, will feature talented tailbacks Jimmy Niven and Steve Williams.

"We're going to be primarily a running team again, but we'll keep defenses honest with our passing game," said Fracalossi. "J.T has a strong arm, and we're going to take advantage of that. Of course, he's also probably the best overall athlete on the team, so I think we're going to have a lot of flexibility there."

Hanover

Getting used to a new coach is one thing, but getting used to new offensive and defensive strategies is quite another. Yet first-year Hanover coach Dave Maimaron said his players are adjusting well to what's being thrown at them.

"Usually, the defense is way ahead of the offense, but they seem to be picking up the offense quicker," said Maimaron, who was an assistant coach at Everett and has coached at the collegiate level.

Maimaron said the Indians team (which last year finished at 4-6 overall and 3-3 in the league) will be running a Triple Option offense, in which the quarterback gives the ball to either the fullback, running back, or tailback every play.

Hanover's defense will be changing to a 4-3, in which four defensive linemen will set up at the line of scrimmage in front of three linebackers.

"There's a lot of man-to-man coverage," he said. "We'll be at an advantage because no one else in the league runs this type of defense. It will be really good for the guys because this is the defense that most colleges run, so they'll be prepared if they want to go to school."

The important thing to remember about the new offense and defensive games Maimaron said, is that there will be "no superstars."

"They're going to need to stay together and work hard," he said. "The performance on both sides of the ball will be based on the entire team's effort."

Key players returning to the lineup for Hanover are the four senior captains: Jim Winthrop, Kevin Hoyle, Dana Butner, and Chris Delaney. Also, fullback/linebacker Chris Williamson, and running back Mike Marini.

A quarterback for the team has not yet been decided. Two juniors (Matt Dwyer, Mike Carven) and sophomore Adam Pardo are currently battling it out for the starting slot. Maimaron said he'd pick a starter before next week.

Norwell and Carver are teams he has picked A goal he has set for the team is winning the first game, which will be played against Scituate, Sept. 15.

"They've got a great attitude," said Maimaron of his team. "They're picking things up faster than I expected."

"This will be the first year where I honestly feel like we're building on something. In the first year, our main focus was putting our system in, and then last year we were hit hard by graduations. This year we have a lot of returning starters, and I'd be surprised if we weren't a lot better."

Haddad: DPW maintaining schools

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@AOL.COM

Though schools will look their best for opening day, they don't look like that for long. From the Osgood and Deer Hill schools, to the middle/high school, everyday wear and tear from the buildings' hundreds of students, teachers and visitors soon strips the gleam from the floor, dirties the walls and damages the bathrooms.

Like schools everywhere, Cohasset's school buildings have not escaped the deteriorating effects that come with educating the town's youth. Unfortunately, in a scenario being played out across the state, schools are sometimes forced to choose between the paying for teachers and equipment, or keeping the walls nicely painted.

Town Manager Mark Haddad recognizes this dilemma, but also knows that with $41 million being spent by the town in renovations at the Deer Hill and middle/high school over the next few years, taxpayers and students deserve to have those capital improvements looking good.

Last year, responding to these concerns, Haddad looked into having a private company clean and maintain the schools. However, when the bids received showed the cost to outsource similar to the cost of keeping the school's custodial staff onboard to do the work — about $332,000 — the latter was done, though with a twist. Two of the school's 10 custodians were transferred to the town's Department of Public Works to become "maintenance" leaving eight "janitors." The remaining eight custodians are overseen by the school department and the four school maintenance personnel are overseen by Harold Litchfield, superintendent of the DPW.

The results of the revamped school maintenance lineup has been, according to Haddad, "pretty good."

"We've very excited," said Haddad. "The school committee and superintendent [Dr. Edward Malvey] are fully behind it."

The end result, said Haddad, is that the schools should be maintained at a higher level than they had been in the past. Custodians will perform duties such as sweeping, mopping and waxing floors, and cleaning bathrooms, and maintenance personnel will be in charge of keeping the boilers serviced properly, painting when needed, fixing or replacing doors, and any other improvements to the physical building.

If a lightbulb blows, proper procedure is to fill out a form and submit it to Malvey, who in turn submits it to the DPW where it is put on a maintenance staff's punch-list for the day, according to Haddad.

"We're still seeing how the system works," he said, adding "but talking to [Malvey], he's been very happy."

"It has been running very, very smoothly," agreed Malvey. He said Haddad, Litchfeld and the staff have been working together very cooperatively, and have completed a "number of minor repair work throughout the summer in all three facilities."

Though work has been getting done, the drawback is that it has been costing the town money. Haddad said $105,000 was initially budgeted for school maintenance expenses, such as supplies and outside maintenance contracts, and that the town has been "blowing through that." He said the town will have to ask for more at this fall's special town meeting, but hopes residents realize that money appropriated for school maintenance is being spent on school maintenance.

elementary grades," he said.

There will be 15 new faces on the department's professional staff, including new teachers, librarians, and a music teacher, as well as a new middle/high school principal, Michael Jones, and a new special education director, Steven Kaplan (see related story). "They are a combination of replacements as well as two or three new positions," said Malvey.

December will mark the school construction project's official beginning when bid requests are published. The first shovel of dirt is expected to be removed in March. Malvey realizes that construction projects, heavy equipment, and education don't exactly complement each other, but he fully intends on keeping the educators and students focused on the task at hand.

"It's going to have an impact. You can't have heavy equipment on site without having some type of conflict," said Malvey, who is starting his third year as superintendent. "We hope to downplay the negative side [relocation of classrooms, computer labs, libraries] and keep the students and staff focused on education."

Though accreditation is still two years away, Malvey said his department will work on creating a school district "master plan" that will explain the system's mission statement, the goals of its programs, define its curriculum, and address personnel and facility issues. Community involvement is needed on this project and Malvey said a series of subgroups will work pulling together the master plan throughout the school year. Accreditation renewal is required by the state every ten years.

Educationally, Malvey said the schools will work to improve on their performance in last year's MCAS tests. "We did very, very well, particularly in the 10th-grade scores," said Malvey. As a district, Cohasset finished 12th in the state overall, and its 10th grade scores were the best in the state. Malvey hopes with some additional support services for the test, the fourth- and eighth-grade scores can rival their older counterparts. Malvey also said the school system will be "fine tuning" its curriculum to better fit state guidelines.

As for himself, Malvey plans to establish better lines of communication, both inside the school department and outside. "Parents should be proud of what the educational offerings are to children here in Cohasset," he said.

Ken Cisneros, the school department's technology head, said Cohasset schools received 61 new computers, thanks to a $150,000 appropriation from Town Meeting, and he hopes to have a computer in every classroom in the three schools by the end of September. "In the Osgood, each of the teachers has a computer and printer in the classroom, and all teachers have an internet connection at their computer workstations," he said. "The middle school will also have computers and printers in every classroom." Other improvements include an overhaul of the math lab in the high school, which now has 18 work stations; a 27-inch digital TV in every classroom at Deer Hill that can be used as a classroom-wide computer screen; and portable screens and multimedia projectors.

"Parents should be proud of what the educational offerings are to children here in Cohasset."

— Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools.

The computers aren't designed to be used for playing computer games or typing papers, instead to use computers as another type of educational resource. "One of the plans for the schools, is to have all the teachers' professional development goals integrate technology into the curriculum," explained Cisneros. The computers can be used to store grades, create lesson plans and make presentations to the class.

Because of the impending school construction, and the reconfiguration of the middle/high school library area, the new math lab (Room 110) and its 18 computers have been moved to the old math lab in Room 204, Cisneros said. The graphics lab will be moved from the library to the guidance conference room on the first floor.

Cisneros also hopes to have a computer in each classroom at the high school by the middle of September, starting with the math and science rooms.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo, will be affected by both phases of the school renovations projects. His son Jim is entering the eighth grade at the middle/senior high school, and son Sam will be a fifth-grader at the Deer Hill School. But DeGiacomo said he is looking forward to the school year, as a parent and a school committee member. "I'm very excited about having a new principal at the middle/high school. While we're all going to miss [retiring principal] Curt Collins, who served the system so well, it's always exciting to have a new person with the qualifications Dr. Jones brings to head up the school," he said.

He also is happy with the education his children are receiving in Cohasset. "We never want to sit back and relax because of the fantastic performance last year [on the MCAS], but I think I, as a parent, feel very good about sending my children to a school system that performed at such a high level."

School committee chairman Pat Martin is actually kind of sad that school is starting. "I enjoy the summer, I like having my kids at home," she said. "I like the slow pace, not having to be someplace...I suppose that's related to being on the school committee, and having to be certain places and certain times. It's nice not to have those things."

Martin's son Daniel will be entering the Deer Hill, and as a parent, she is excited about meeting the school's staff. "I haven't had any experience with Deer Hill, and I'm looking forward to getting to know it," said Martin whose daughter Carly will be a second-grader at Osgood. "Each school has a unique feeling to it."

She also is looking forward to filling her house with her kid's school artwork, reveling in the excitement of their new friends, and the thrill of her children's mastering a skill or passing a test.

As for the school committee, after a quiet summer, the committee expects to reestablish its twice-a-month meeting schedule starting in September. The next meeting is slated for Sept. 7.

New director of special education named

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@AOL.COM

The school department has named Steven Kaplan as the new head of special education, superintendent Edward Malvey said.

Kaplan had been a special education director in Southborough, and most recently was affiliated with the Edison Project – a public/private collaboration designed to help public school districts develop and manage special education programs, in association with the private sector. More than 100 schools and school districts are involved with the project nationwide.

"He was responsible for special education compliance in a number of states," said Malvey.

He said Kaplan was one of 25 candidates reviewed by an interview committee, made up of representatives from the parent advisory committee, administrators and teachers. According to Malvey, out of the 11 candidates recommended for an interview with Malvey, Kaplan was the committee's "unanimous" choice for the position.

"The feedback I received was that he [Kaplan] was the right match for Cohasset," Malvey said.

"He was responsible for special education compliance in a number of states."

— Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools

According to Malvey, Kaplan is familiar with the current state of special education in Massachusetts, as well as nationwide. He said Kaplan is a "true advocate for children" and has experience with the psychological, educational and administrative aspects of special education.

Kaplan has a bachelor's degree in psychology from Fairleigh Dickinson University and a master's degree in psychology from the University of Rhode Island. He has completed doctoral course work in school psychology at Temple University and has had a private psychology practice.

In the late 1980's, Kaplan was the assistant director of student services for the Concord-Carlisle school district, before moving on to Southborough, Malvey said.

School committee chairman Pat Martin said the board is very excited about Kaplan joining the school department. "We're excited...He'll be able to provide a national perspective on special education," she said. "I think he'll make a nice addition to the administrative team."

Kaplan will start the full-time, $76,500 position on Sept. 1.

Captains John Jacob Lothrop and Daniel Tower Lothrop

LOOKING BACK

David Wentworth

Recently discovered documents found in the current owners of the Capt. John J. Lothrop house, provide additional information about the times in which these two master mariners captained merchant ships out of New England.

Captain John Jacob Lothrop, one of Cohasset's early Deep Sea Captains, was a son of Colonel Thomas and Ruth (Nichols) Lothrop of Cohasset. John J. Lothrop was born 6 November 1765 and married in August 1788 Bethia Tower, of another Cohasset maritime family. He was to become one of the town's most prominent master mariners and ship captains during some of the greatest days of New England's "Age of Sail." Capt. John J. Lothrop resided on Summer Street, in a house he built in about 1788, later called "The Sankey House" (for his granddaughter Bethia Lothrop Sankey who lived there in the latter 1800s and early 1900s), but now named for its builder.

Cohasset's maritime records have been sparse for the early years; the latter 18th and early 19th centuries seafaring history of the town was not as well recorded as were later years, or the records have become lost. However, it is known that Captain John J. Lothrop was master of the schooner Priscilla in 1789, of schooner Betsy in 1794, and of schooner Bethia in 1795. Recently discovered in his Summer Street house have been a group of papers, including letters, relating to John Jacob Lothrop's maritime career. Some shed light on maritime activities most likely typical for that time, beginning in about 1810. It is clear that Capt. Lothrop moved from small and medium-sized schooners to large merchant vessels sailing from Boston to ports of the world. In December 1810 Pickering Dodge of Salem wrote to Capt. Lothrop regarding a cargo of Nicaraguan wood the Captain was about to purchase for delivery to the port of Archangel, Russia, instructing him that in the purchase of wood bound for Russia, only wood from Spanish Settlements, and from nowhere else, was allowed to enter Russian ports. All wood bound for Russia must be "of Spanish Production." Another fragment of a letter, with date missing, mentions the port of Riga, and another, author not shown, written in 1816 in Havana to Samuel C. Gray, refers to making up freight for St. Petersburg, and a cargo of sugar. Separately, among the group of papers, two pages of calculations relating to the value of a shipment of cotton to Copenhagen can be found. These cities were among the leading ports of northern Europe frequented by American trading vessels, and appear quite separate from the Mediterranean and Black Sea ports of call mentioned later in the Drusilla Snow Percival diaries of the 1850's, those relating to voyages to Malta, Constantinople and Beirut. The years of the latter 18th and earliest 19th centuries were among the best for the aggressive Federalist ship-owning merchants of Boston, sending their ships not only to the American northwest coast and Orient but to the ports of Latin America, the Caribbean and northern continental Europe. St. Petersburg was the ocean terminus of an active trade route leading to the Russian interior. Boston merchants, and Sea Captains, were there in numbers, and Cohasset Captain John J. Lothrop was among them.

Also among the group of papers is part of a certificate, with date missing, issued to Captain John J. Lothrop, Master of the brig Eliza, 222 tons, of Kennebunk, by the American Commercial Agent in the port of Kingston, Jamaica., confirming that the ship's papers had been lodged at his office, as United States law required. No mention of cargo is made, but a usual cargo from the Caribbean ports included, of course, molasses. Captain John J. Lothrop died in November 1823, and his son Daniel Tower Lothrop, born in January 1796 carried on the family seafaring tradition. He married (1) in January 1825 Abigail Joy of Cohasset, then (2) Julia Ann Cunningham. Daniel T. Lothrop was a Master Mariner, and "Underwriter's Agent," and resided in his father's house on Summer Street. Among the group of Lothrop papers is a partly legible Customs Certificate issued during the 1820's, from the District of Boston and Charlestown, to Daniel T. Lothrop as Master or Commander of the brig Charlotte, 224 tons, and carrying no guns, confirming that he had entered and cleared the vessel, as the law required. Unfortunately neither signature nor nature of the cargo can be read. A July 1826 letter to Samuel C. Gray, datelined St. Petersburg, mentions "sugars for trading" and notes that Charlotte has just finished discharging cargo. "Sugar, hemp & manufacturies" are discussed as cargo, and it is observed that, at the time, sugar could not be sold at high enough prices to pay the freight and shipping. The inevitable detailed report of the current state of the merchant's financial accounts is made. Although only parts of the letters, certificates and account pages in the group of Lothrop papers now can be read, it is enough to show the constant attention paid to the availability and value of cargo, to fluctuations in prices in various port cities, and to the need for constant activity that characterized Federalist New England mercantile ventures in the "Age of Sail." Of such things could fortunes be made.

Captain John J. Lothrop died in November 1823, and his son Daniel Tower Lothrop, born in January 1796 carried on the family seafaring tradition.

IT'S HAPPENING

Secondary schools at Derby Academy

Derby Academy in Hingham is hosting its fifth annual Secondary School Fair for South Shore families interested in learning more about independent secondary school educational opportunities. Scheduled for the evening of Tuesday, Sept. 19, this informative fair will run from 6:30-8:30 p.m., rain or shine.

Representatives from 60 local and regional schools from around New England will be available to meet and talk with students and parents about their special programs, whether they be coed or single sex, day or boarding, independent or Catholic. Most will have materials to hand out to visitors as well.

The fair is free and open to all, and there is no need to register early. Derby Academy, an independent, coeducational day school serving students in pre-kindergarten through grade nine, is located at 56 Burditt Ave. (across Route 3A) from Hingham Harbor.

Potluck dinner hosted by AAUW

Hingham Area AAUW, (American Association of University Women) will hold its annual Pot Luck Dinner kick off meeting on Sept. 12, at 6:30 p.m. at the Lincoln School Apartments Community room, 86 Central St. This meeting is free and open to the public. For more information and directions call (781) 749-6274.

Membership in AAUW is open to all college or university graduates. The American Association of University Women is a network of women and men dedicated to removing the barriers that block women from full equality. For more than a century, people have joined AAUW to create opportunities for women and girls to take local and national-level action on the vital social issues of the day, to develop life-long interests, leadership skills, and friendships.

Newly licensed driver in crash

Police think driver inexperience may have contributed to a car crash on Sohier Street early Sunday morning.

A 16-year-old Cohasset boy, who had his license for only four days, said he dozed off at the wheel before crashing into a utility pole, police said. Police did not release the boy's name because he is a juvenile. The three passengers in the vehicle, all females, were all transported to South Shore Hospital where they were treated and released.

The 1992 Buick sedan was travelling eastbound (toward town) when it drifted over the center lane and hit the pole breaking it into several pieces. When police arrived, the car was on its side with the four teens trapped inside.

The driver, who had no visible injuries, was brought to South Shore Hospital by a family friend where he could check on his friends, according to police, who said all the occupants were wearing seatbelts. Safety bags in the vehicle were also used.

Police said driver inexperience, driver fatigue and speed contributed to the crash. Estimated speed of the vehicle was 45 mph in a 30 mph zone. Police are still investigating whether alcohol also played a role. There was an ice-cold 12-pack of Coors Light beer in the trunk.

The driver was cited for junior operator license passenger restriction violation, minor transport of alcohol and failure to stay within marked lanes.

Injured in the crash were two sisters, ages 15 and 16 respectively, of Weymouth and Jessica Steverman, 17, of 245 Roosevelt Road in Weymouth. The girls are students at Notre Dame Academy, police said.

Police said junior operators are not allowed to transport anyone other than family members for the first six months after being licensed.

Have a Happy & Safe School Year!

Creating art comes naturally to Cohasset's Robert Ziff

By Rick Collins

Maybe it's called "Environmentally-Friendly Art." Or perhaps "Recycled Beach Art." How about "Stuck on Wrack?"

Whatever your call what Robert Ziff does, it sure is interesting.

For the past couple of years, Ziff has been busy scouring the beaches of Cohasset for beach debris, that he can turn into art. Following in the footsteps of modern artists who take scrap metal and then mold it, weld it and put a hefty price tag on the result, Ziff has created his own unique version. Instead of metal scraps, he uses mussel shells. Rather than plywood, Ziff uses driftwood.

The result is a quaint, yet intricate and fascinating type of art.

Ziff's piece entitled "Erosion" is two-feet wide by three-feet deep, with three seagull skulls on an interlocked backing of driftwood pieces. The skull's condition deteriorates from left to right, hence "erosion."

This is just one example of the dozens of creations designed by the Forest Notch resident. Ziff has 15 works spread throughout his house, made of seaside items such as driftwood, wrack, mussel and clam shells, buoys, lobster shells, and whatever else he may find on his walks along the beach.

Ziff's basement is filled with souvenirs from the beach. Stacks of driftwood pieces fill one corner. Thousands of drying indigo and light-blue colored mussel shells lay in another.

Once a month Ziff, a silent partner in a southern commercial real estate group, will walk along Sandy Beach or Black Rock Beach and fill large plastic containers with what he finds. "Sometimes I have an idea of what I want to do," he explained, "other times I will find a piece of driftwood that looks like a fish head."

Artist, Robert Ziff, of Forest Notch

In order to fully appreciate the artwork, some imagination is needed. Resting next to a portion of Cohasset granite that pokes up in his basement, is a five-foot long piece of driftwood that vaguely resembles the head of a whale. Another finished piece called "Man Hanging Out" features a dangling piece of wood that looks like an old face from two angles, but when tipped over, the looks like a dog.

He said the best time to scour the beach tends to be after a big storm. Once, he found a number of small foot-wide cement circles. He strung them together and created a necklace.

"I've gotten a lot of positive feedback. Of course relatives and friends say 'Oh, they're marvelous'," Ziff said.

You can count his wife, Kelly, among his fans. "It's amazing that he can create something so beautiful out of everyday things," she gushed. "I find it very moving."

Ziff didn't start out thinking he would become an aspiring artist. He entered the University of Colorado hoping to major in business like his father and grandfather. But while taking the requisite business and math courses, he realized he had a penchant for the arts. He began taking writing classes, and did silkscreen drawings. He eventually majored in creative writing. After college, Ziff traveled around before settling in Florida. It was there he first saw the possibilities in the "treasures" that if found washed up on beaches. When he moved to Cohasset in 1995, he took some pieces with him, and soon created his first piece, "Dock Under Cloudy Sky." It is a six-foot wide work featuring pieces of wood lined up horizontally, vertically and diagonally to create the image of a dock, a body of water, and a gloomy sky.

Kelly Ziff said when he first mentioned creating something like this, "I had no idea he was going to come up with anything that intricate."

She said she will help sometimes either by "telling him where some stuff is" or by giving a second opinion on what a particular piece of wood resembles.

Ziff's daughter Hannah, 5, also gets in the act. "I'll show her something and ask her what it looks like. She has a great imagination," said Ziff.

"I like how it turns out. It's really, really pretty," the soon-to-be kindergartner at the Osgood School said.

Currently, all the work he has done is either in his house or a relative's, but he is in the process of sending out brochures to area art galleries, hoping to set up a show at some time. "A guy from an art gallery said it was good stuff," said Ziff. He also plans to become a member of the South Shore Art Center.

Ideally, Ziff would like to do his art on a full-time basis. Not only are his pieces for sale, but he said he can do commissioned work for anyone interested.

"I never know what the final thing looks like," Ziff said about the creative process. "It's like putting a puzzle together without ever seeing the picture on the box."

Going to the dogs

Second annual benefit supports Scituate animal shelter

By Liz Lawrence
LLAWRENCE@CNC.COM

Slinky, a five-year-old tan and white ferret was left outside the Scituate Animal Shelter in June, covered in feces and beer bottle caps.

To make matters worse, the veterinarian that examined the animal after it was found, discovered a tumor in its adrenaline gland. The lifesaving treatment left the ferret bald.

Just two months later, Slinky affectionately known as "Slink" by shelter volunteers has an almost full coat of shiny hair and she's eagerly awaiting a new home.

Slinky's is one of many stories of abandoned or unwanted animals, who have found temporary lodging at the no-kill Eleanor Haughy Animal Shelter on the Driftway.

"Each one has a different story," said shelter director Joan McCafferty of the cats, and dogs and ferrets and other animals she cares for until a new home can be found for them.

That care comes at a high cost. Feeding, medical care including spaying and neutering and vaccinations costs the mostly volunteer run shelter thousands of dollars each year.

In an effort to raise money to help care for the animals, the Scituate Animal Shelter which also serves the towns of Cohasset and Hull is throwing its second annual benefit, "Friends of the Scituate Animal Shelter." The event will take place at Siros restaurant in Hingham, Sunday Sept. 10 from 2 to 5 p.m.

McCafferty invites animal lovers and shelter supporters. Guest speakers for the event include State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and Ted Reinstein of WCVB-TV (Channel 5). The pianist for the evening will be Lenae Badger.

Scituate Animal Shelter Director Joan McCafferty holds Slinky, a five-year-old ferret abandoned two months ago on the shelter's doorstep. Slinky, along with 56 cats and six dogs living at the no-kill facility are all available for adoption.

"It's a good forum to talk about some of the animals here and get them adopted," said McCafferty.

The $50 per person cost goes in full to support the Shelter, McCafferty said. And it needs every penny. According to Scituate's Animal Control Officer Kimberly Gilsdorf, the shelter is currently home to 56 cats, six dogs and Slinky the ferret. All of the shelter animals are ready for adoption.

Currently said Gilsdorf, 30 to 40 volunteers give of their time each week to help care for the animals.

Kristen Wohlgemuth, is one of them.

Wohlgemuth comes to the shelter twice a week to feed the animals, clean the cages, and administer medicine.

She even adopted a calico cat she named Luna. She said they found Luna abandoned in an empty apartment. The owner simply left the cat behind when she moved out.

"I just love animals," said Wohlegemuth.

She said she will be one of the many people she hopes will attend the shelter's gala benefit.

Last year, the benefit raised $15,000, said McCafferty. Two hundred guests attended the event, and most of the funds went toward crucial medical expenses, said McCafferty.

Expenses for medical treatment run high said Mccafferty. The cats can often carry an airborne leukemia that can make them very sick said McCafferty. Similarly the dogs can get heart worm, a bug that is easily contagious to other dogs.

She said that it is absolutely necessary to have the funds to keep the shelter clean in order for the animals not to return to the original state they found them.

"Some are found sick, undernourished and mistreated," said McCafferty.

For instance a Rotweiler mix named Riva came to the shelter mistreated, and badly neglected. She was unable to trust anyone said McCafferty. It was so bad that when Riva moved in with her first set of owners, she became attached to the husband, and would not trust the wife, said McCafferty.

McCafferty said another family then adopted her, and slowly taught her to trust.

Now she is great, and even swimming with kids, said McCafferty.

"Most animals show promise, all they need is consistency, and someone who cares," said McCafferty.

To purchase tickets for the benefit or to volunteer time to the shelter call 545-8703.

Joan Paley to sign

Noted Scituate children's illustrator Joan Paley will sign copies of her new book, "Little White Duck," a sing along story on Saturday, Sept.16 from 2-4pm at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. Guitarist Norman Paley will join her to play this song and others. Free for all ages. Call (781) -383-2665 for more information.

Woodland gardens

Marty Amdur, the woodland gardener, will offer a two-part workshop on the garden of autumn and the garden of winter, 9:30 a.m. - 11 a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 9 and 16. Critical elements of the winter garden and those perennials, shrubs and trees that create a wonderful palette for the autumn garden will be discussed. The workshop will include looking at actual plant material, slides, hand outs, bibliography and fall perennials for sale. Amdur has many years of gardening experience and a letter of participation from Arnold Arboretum in woody plant identification.

The cost will be $25 for the two-part workshop. Call (781) 749-0691 for more information.

Author to speak at Glastonbury Abbey

The Rev. Timothy J. Joyce, author of "Celtic Christianity" and "The Spirituality of the Celtic Saints," will speak about his newest book, "Celtic Quest, A Healing Journey for Irish Catholics," at 11 a.m. Sunday, Sept. 17, at Glastonbury Abbey Chapel, 16 Hull St., Hingham.

Joyce will autograph his book following the talk.

Clambake at Sandy Beach

On Saturday, Sept. 9, the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion is sponsoring a clambake for the annual Christine Burke Scholarship Fun at Sandy Beach, Cohasset, all for the benefit of Cohasset High School students.

According to committee chairman Scott Arnold, "We've added some new twists this year. We're having a dunk-tank, and we have commitments from the chairman of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, Tom Callahan, and the chairman of the Scituate Board of Selectmen, Ralph Crossen, to go into the tank. Now there's a money maker!"

In addition, there will be three-legged races and bag races for the kids with prizes for participants.

Then there's a home-run hitting contest using whiffle balls and whiffle bats for young and old.

Volleyball is available for the willing and uninjured from teens to creepers. To honor the ancient and honorable there will be a horseshoe contest for the old guys who can't do anything else.

Finally, there will be the main event, a full clambake put on by the famed Marshfield slugger, Dan Anderson, all accompanied by great Irish music featuring the Irish Volunteers and some great raffles with DJ Jay Fiori acting as master of ceremonies.

The raffles feature nearly 100 donated prizes from local merchants in Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham including 32-inch, 27-inch, and 20-inch Panasonic television sets.

Tickets are $30 each. More than 200 have been sold and the maximum is 400. For tickets call Neil J. Murphy at 383-6773 or Scott Arnold at 545-1896.

OBITUARIES

Nancy Elizabeth Allen

Nancy Elizabeth Allen, 87, a two-and-a-half-year resident of Cohasset, formerly 40 years of Wheatland, Wyo., died Friday, Aug. 25, 2000, in Cohasset following a long illness.

She was born in Berea, Ky., graduated from Laramie High School, class of 1931 and graduated from the Wyoming University.

She worked as a high school librarian for 20 years and was past Wyoming state president of the PEO Sisterhood, past state president Wyoming Library Association, the American Legion, a member of the Eastern Star and director of the United Church of Christ Choir.

She leaves a son, John Allen of Laramie; a daughter, Peggy Steverner of Cohasset; five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. She was the wife of the late John M. Allen and was preceded by a sister.

A memorial service was celebrated in St. Mary's Parish, St. Ann's Church, Hull.

Memorial contributions may be made to the charity of senders choice. The Cremation Society of Massachusetts, Quincy, is in charge of arrangements.

Richard T. Streeter

Richard T Streeter, 74, of Sandwich, a native of Vermont and former Cohasset High School principal, died July 17, 2000 at his home after a six month battle with pancreatic cancer.

Mr. Streeter was born April 15, 1926 in Wilmington, Vt., son of Earl and Mary (Sheahan) Streeter. He attended school in Wilmington graduating from Wilmington High School in 1944.

During World War II, he served in the United States Army Air Corps, 1944-1946.

He was married to Priscilla J. Mazelli of Wilmington, Vt. on April 14, 1951.

Mr. Streeter attended Ithaca College and received his undergraduate degree from Springfield College in 1950. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1961 with a master's degree in education and from Northeastern University in 1977 with a Certificate of Advanced Studies (CAGS). He coached and taught in high schools in Bethel, Wilmington and Bellows Falls and was principal of Northfield High School, all in Vermont, from 1950 to 1970. He served as high school principal from 1970 to 1986 and assistant superintendent 1986 to 1989 in Cohasset.

Mr. and Mrs. Streeter retired to Sandwich in June, 1988.

Mr. Streeter had interests in woodworking, pen and ink drawing, all member sports and was an avid golfer.

He was a communicant of Corpus Christi Catholic Parish in Sandwich since 1988.

He leaves his wife Priscilla; two daughters, Deborah Jean Streeter of Plymouth and Nancy Ann Harrison and grandson, Jason Michael Harrison, of Marstons Mills. He also leaves three brothers, Frederick of Randolph, Vt., Alpheus of Wellsville, N.Y. and Edward of Shenandoah Jct, W.Va.; as well as several nieces and nephews. He was predeceased by a brother, George in 1982 and sister Mary Margaret in 1931.

A Memorial Mass was celebrated at Corpus Christi Parish, E. Sandwich. Interment will be in Wilmington, Vt. at a later date.

Contributions may be made to The Richard T. Streeter Memorial Fund, c/o Plymouth Savings Bank, 61 Route 6A, Sandwich, MA 02563, which will be used for pancreatic cancer research.

Elinor E. Farrell

Elinor E. (Buckley) Farrell, 77, a homemaker, died July 21, 2000, at Olympus Specialty Hospital in Braintree after a brief illness.

Mrs. Farrell was a graduate of Notre Dame Academy in Boston and Catherine Gibbs School in Boston.

Born in Quincy, Mrs. Farrell lived in Brookline and Scituate before she moved to Hull, where she lived for the past 50 years.

Wife of the late Shan Farrell and Russ Murray, she leaves two sons, Richard Stevens of Cohasset and Gary Stevens of Deerfield Beach, Fla.; five grandchildren, and several nephews and nieces.

A funeral Mass was celebrated July 24 at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was private.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset, handled the arrangements.

Donations in Mrs. Farrell's memory may be made to St. Anthony's Parish Center at 10 Summer St., Cohasset 02025.

Illustrator's collages bring color and texture to children's books

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Joan Paley of Scituate creates worlds with colored paper.

The Narrator

A retired veteran of the Boston publishing scene, Paley has been an illustrator of children's books for the past five years.

She's celebrating her most recent release (April, 2000) "Little White Duck" with a book-signing and sing-along at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset on Sept. 16 from 2-4 p.m..

"It was a dream come true. I almost feel like I'm in show business. I'm able to do what I love all the time, and that's a luxury a lot of people don't have."
Illustrator Joan Paley

During the past five years, Paley has contributed much to realm of children's books. In addition to illustrating "Little White Duck," she also worked on the art for the popular children's works "What's That Sound Woolly Bear?," "Unbeatable Beaks," and "I Like Stars."

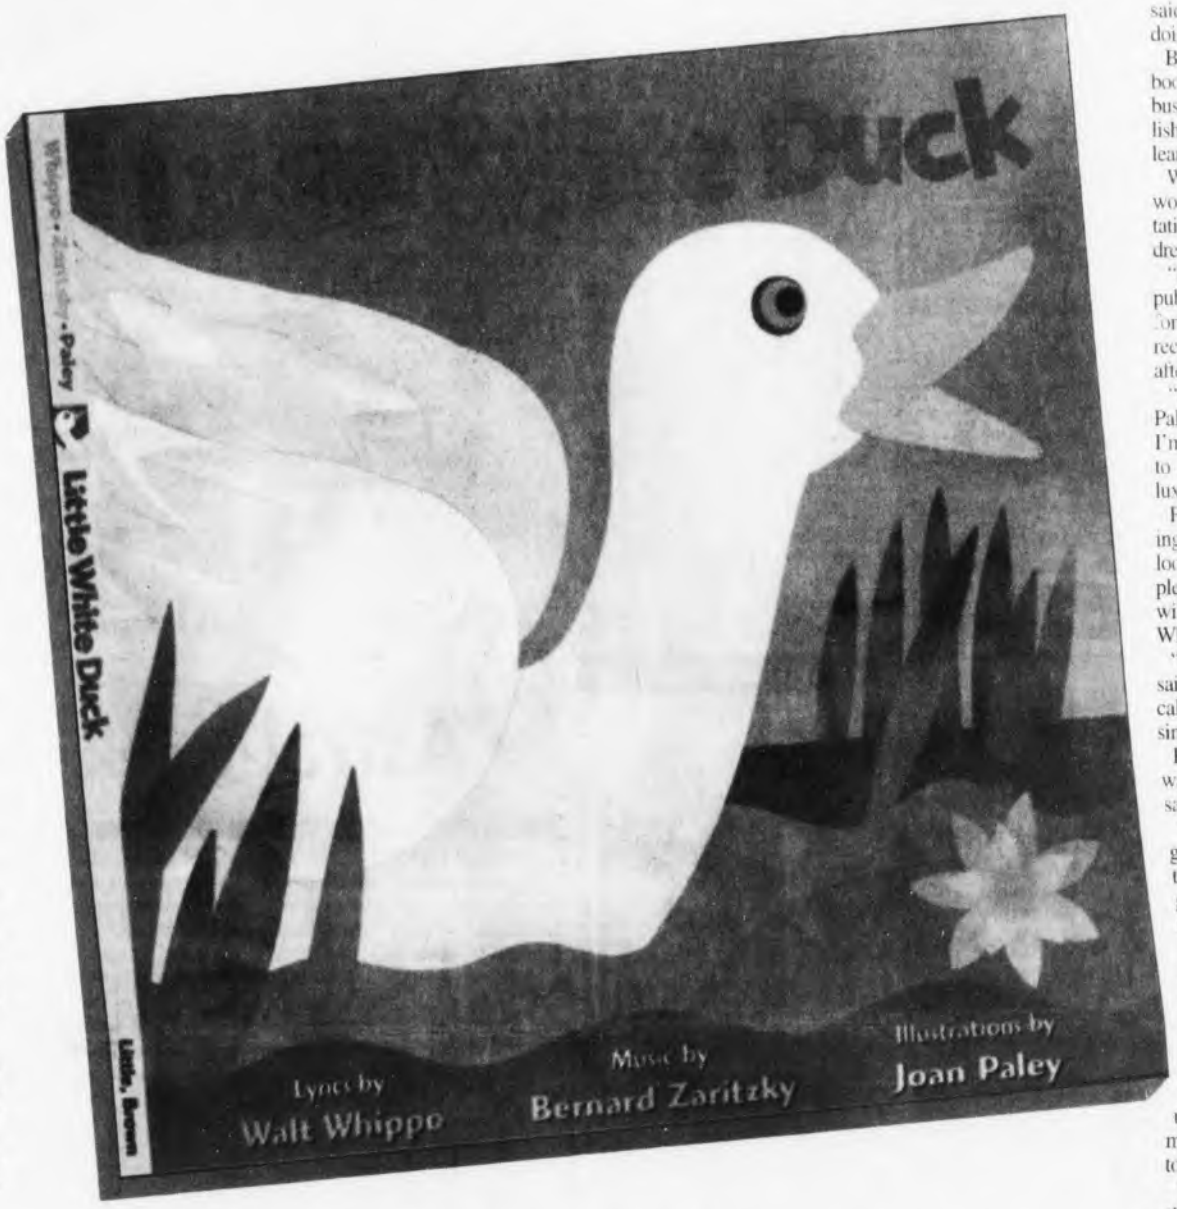
Currently Paley is illustrating a children's book "with a Noah's Ark theme" and is working on a book called "The Emperor Laid An Egg," due to be published next fall.

Paley's style of illustration is not what one sees everyday in a given children's book—she works strictly in collage form.

Little White Duck

"My style basically includes cutting paper, hand-painting them, and piecing them together to make a picture," she said. "With that method, I try to replicate a lot of different textures. It's just my style, but it's not something new. There's other collage artists out there."

Paley found a different type of challenge when her agent Judy Sue Goodwin-Sturges presented her with the idea to adapt to book form a 50-year-old children's song called "Little White Duck."



"We had the idea in our heads of booking a children's song for a while," Paley said. "But it was just a matter of finding the right one."

"Little White Duck," " with lyrics by Walt Whippo and music by Bernard Zaritzky was the right one.

"The song celebrated its 50th anniversary this year, so we figured it would work out well," Paley said. "And it's a charming story. It's about a little white duck that's sitting in the water and he has encounters with different creatures like a frog and a snake." She noted the story line consists of the actual song lyrics.

Paley's adaptation of the song is receiving critical praise from prestigious reviewers like Booklist, the School Library Journal, Publishers Weekly, and Kirkus.

Little Black Bug

"The dynamic illustrations (in Little White Duck) create an illusion of sound and movement," stated the Kirkus review.

Publishers Weekly said Paley's book "virtually whirrs with life and provides a pulsating energy."

"It's doing wonderfully," Paley said. "In June, we found out it was doing much better than we had anticipated." Paley said the first printing of the book consisted 10,000 copies. In June, another printing was launched which produced another 10,000-15,000 copies of the book.

The Scholastic Book Company recently picked up the book for the book lists it distributes to schools across the country.

"I'm happy with the book's success," she said. "it's really something I just love doing."

Before she began illustrating children's books, Paley was involved in the publishing business. She worked in Massachusetts publishing houses like D.C. Heath where she learned about the nature of the business.

When a friend of Paley's showed her art work to a Little Brown publishing representative, her work as an illustratror for children's books was launched.

Little Red Snake

"Little Brown was the first publishing company I worked for," she said, noting they recruited her as an illustrator after seeing her work.

"It was a dream come true," Paley said. "I almost feel like I'm in show business. I'm able to do what I love all the time, and that's a luxury a lot of people don't have."

Paley said she is excited about the upcoming book-signing in Cohasset because she is looking forward to meeting some new people, and also because her husband Norman will be supporting the reading of Little White Duck by playing his guitar.

"He's been playing guitar for years," Paley said. "So he's going to be providing a musical backdrop and we're going to have kids sing along."

Paley said the children's book industry was once impossible to break into, but she said it is changing these days.

"A few years ago publishers were just going with known people," she said. "Now the market is a little more open. Having a good story that appeals to children's lives is the key."

Little Green Frog

She said all the art she creates for children's books comes from the heart.

"It's just something that comes from within," she said. "When I read a story that I need to put art to, I usually let it sit in my head in my head for a while, and then the ideas start to come."

When she begins to work on art for a given story, she said further inspiration comes from the surroundings of her own art studio at home.

"When I start painting the pieces of paper and painting them, I hang them up in my studio," she said. "The room starts filling up with bright colors and textures and the studio itself becomes an inspiration. It's like surrounding yourself with anything you love. When you surround yourself with your favorite music, for instance, you're on another plateau."

For more information on Paley or the Sept. 16 book-signing, call Buttonwood Books and Toys at (781) 383-2665.

'Knocking on the door' to a cure

Plymouth's 14th annual MDA telethon is Monday

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The stage is set for battle on the waterfront in the Town of Plymouth.

It won't be battle involving guns, knives or other weaponry. It's a battle against muscular dystrophy.

The14th annual Jerry Lewis Telethon Festival gets underway Monday, Sept. 4 in the Citizens Bank parking lot on North Park Ave. in Plymouth from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m..

"It's a large activity for families," said Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) spokesperson Jim Sharland. "It's been in the same location for the past14 years."

Sharland said all profits generated at the event will be donated to the MDA for research purposes. Last year's event raised almost $25,000 for the organization, Sharland noted. This year the goal is $32,000.

As in years past, the telethon is expected to draw big crowds to Plymouth. Sharland said he expects anywhere from 5,000-7,000 people to turn out for the event.

Sharland said while the event in Plymouth is going on, Jerry Lewis himself will be running his national telethon from Los Angeles.

"Every 45 minutes, the channels carrying the national broadcast will go local," Sharland said. He noted Channel 5 personality Ted Reinstein will be on hand at the Plymouth event as well as representatives from local radio station WATD.

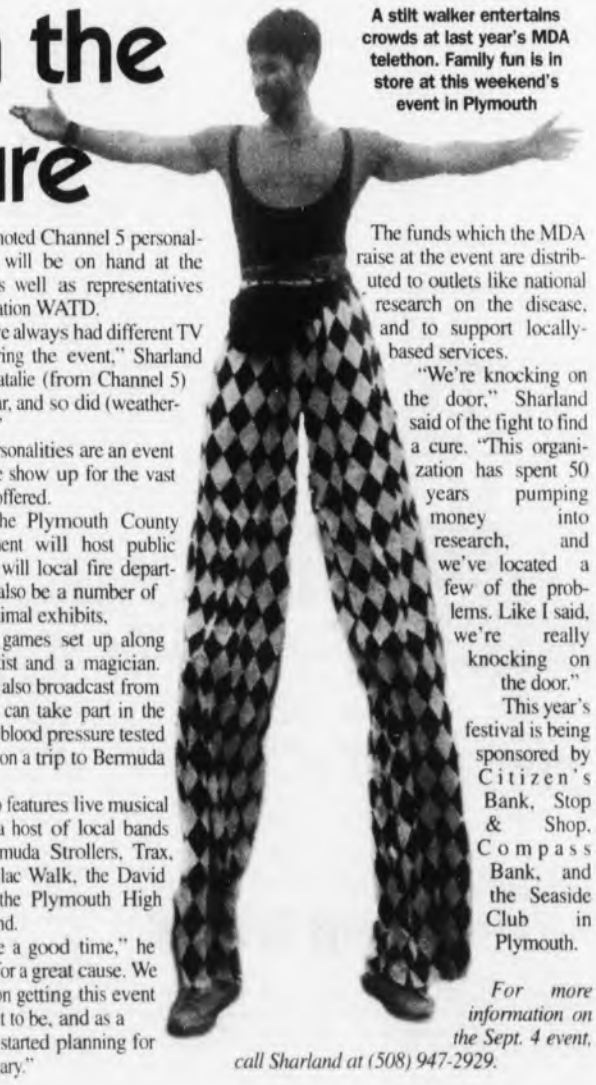
"In the past, we've always had different TV personalities covering the event," Sharland said. "Chet and Natalie (from Channel 5) showed up one year, and so did (weatherman) Dick Albert."

Although TV personalities are an event draw, many people show up for the vast array of activities offered.

Sharland said the Plymouth County Sheriff's Department will host public safety displays as will local fire departments. There will also be a number of children's rides, animal exhibits, face painting and games set up along with a balloon artist and a magician. Radio Disney will also broadcast from the event. Adults can take part in the auction, have their blood pressure tested and take a chance on a trip to Bermuda being raffled.

The telethon also features live musical entertainment by a host of local bands including the Bermuda Strollers, Trax, Jupiter Ray, Cadillac Walk, the David Jones Duo, and the Plymouth High School concert band.

"It's going to be a good time," he said. "And it's all for a great cause. We work really hard on getting this event the way we want it to be, and as a matter of fact, we started planning for it this year in January."



A stilt walker entertains crowds at last year's MDA telethon. Family fun is in store at this weekend's event in Plymouth

The funds which the MDA raise at the event are distributed to outlets like national research on the disease, and to support locally-based services.

"We're knocking on the door," Sharland said of the fight to find a cure. "This organization has spent 50 years pumping money into research, and we've located a few of the problems. Like I said, we're really knocking on the door."

This year's festival is being sponsored by Citizen's Bank, Stop & Shop, Compass Bank, and the Seaside Club in Plymouth.

For more information on the Sept. 4 event, call Sharland at (508) 947-2929.

Pousette-Dart Band plays Plymouth Waterfront

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Part rock, part folk, part country, R&B and jazz, Jon Pousette-Dart and his self-named band were a perfect eclectic fit for the 1970s singer/songwriter era. The musical blend paid off well for the singer/guitarist and company, as the Pousette-Dart Band released four well-received albums on the Capitol label from 1976 to '80 and toured with the likes of Bonnie Raitt, James Taylor, Little Feat and Billy Joel, drawing the same general audience as those performers.

Although they toured nationally, with notable followings in areas such as Nashville, the Midwest and Southwest, Pousette-Dart Band members played frequently in the Boston area and gained a solid, long-term following here as well. Long-time local fans proved they hadn't forgotten when more than ten thousand of them showed for the band's Copley Square Park Music Series concert in 1991, which was followed by comparably well-attended encore shows in the same location over the next several years.

Jon Pousette-Dart, currently recording and touring on his own, still makes regular stops in the Boston area. The singer/guitarist will be back once again this Wednesday (Aug. 30) to headline one of the closing shows of the Project Arts 2000 concert season on the Plymouth Waterfront. Opening for Pousette-Dart are Whitman acoustic singer/songwriter Kerri Powers and Chicago-based blues/R&B combo The Susan Angeletti Band.

"This is one of the best shows we've booked on the Waterfront so far. These are some of the biggest name performers we've had on the schedule since we began the concert series a few years ago and the show overall is a great way to wind down the 2000 summer season."
Mike Landers of Nightlife Music

"This is one of the best shows we've booked on the Waterfront so far," said Mike Landers of Nightlife Music in Plymouth, which books and promotes

Chicken in a pot

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

The Kitchen Detective

Chicken in a pot is, from a culinary point of view, braised meat. Now, you probably think that braising — cooking food, usually meat, with a little liquid in a covered pot — makes that food juicier and more tender. At least, that's what I thought until I started asking questions. Why is braising any different than a stew? How does a moist cooking environment penetrate inside a thick piece of meat, thereby changing its texture or juiciness? If tough meat should be cooked at low temperatures, wouldn't the braising liquid simply raise the ambient temperature (steam is a better conductor of heat than air) thus toughening at least the outer layer of the meat?

I started by doing some research on braising. According to Madeleine Kamman in "The Making of a Cook" (Macmillan, 1971), the term comes from braise which means smoldering coals. Meat was placed in a tightly covered pot called a brasière, which was placed on a bed of embers and then additional coals were placed on the lid, which was slightly concave. Inside, the meat rested on several layers of aromatics (onions, etc.) and raw ham and veal slices, which were called fonds de braise. (This method was developed centuries ago in Europe, before stoves had been invented.)

As usual, I decided to test braising for myself. I cooked a bottom round roast at 200 degrees until the interior reached 130 degrees and then I cooked a second roast, putting 1 cup of stock in the bottom of the pan. The braised roast, the one with the liquid, turned out about the same and the outside of the roast was less flavorful because it did not brown as well. So much for braising as a method for tenderizing meat. However, I did find that braising does produce an instant sauce, a terrific benefit. I then tested a variety of oven temperatures and confirmed that 250 degrees was in fact best. At higher temperatures, the outer layer of the meat will dry out before the interior is properly cooked. This is especially true when braising, as steam is a better conductor of heat than air. At the same oven temperature, braised foods will cook at a higher temperature than dry-roasted foods.

So why is braising different than stewing? Well, they are really quite similar. In fact, the difference between stewing and braising is that stewing uses little pieces of meat rather than one large piece. A beef roast cooked with some liquid is a braise whereas cubed pieces of beef cooked with liquid is a stew. Originally, the braising liquid was probably added to prevent foods from scorching as they cooked in a pot over a fire. Today, a braised chicken that is cooked with vegetables needs some liquid so that the onions or carrots cook evenly without sticking to the bottom of the pan.

I reread Madeleine Kamman's recipes one last time and noted that she was adamant about using the smallest possible pot, sealing it with aluminum foil and a cover and using a second piece of aluminum foil to cover the top of the meat. Her theory is that a larger pot will not produce sufficient pressure and that a loosely covered pot will simply let the steam escape. I went ahead and performed these two additional tests, using a smaller pot and tightly sealing it with aluminum foil, and confirmed that both techniques turned out a slightly more tender, juicier piece of meat.

The recipe below applies the method of braising to chicken. I tested cooking the bird with the skin on and found that the resulting sauce was too fatty. I therefore braise the chicken skinless.

BRAISED CHICKEN OR CHICKEN IN A POT

Use a 5-quart Dutch oven for this recipe, as the chicken pieces will all fit nicely in one layer. Place the breasts in the pot bone side up to make sure that the meat is thoroughly cooked.

3 1/2 pounds skinless chicken parts (breasts, thighs, and legs only)
1/4 cup olive oil, approximately
1 tablespoon butter
1 cup onion, chopped
2 cups vegetables, coarsely chopped
1/4 cup white wine
1 cup chicken broth
1/2 teaspoon kosher salt
1/2 teaspoon dried thyme or 1 1/2 teaspoons fresh
1 teaspoon garlic, minced
2 tablespoons parsley, minced
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Heat oven to 250 degrees. Rinse chicken parts and pat dry. Heat 2 tablespoons olive oil and butter in a Dutch oven and brown both sides over medium/high heat in two separate batches. (Each batch will take about 10 minutes). Add more oil if necessary for second batch. Do not overcrowd pan.

2. Reserve browned chicken in a bowl. Heat 1 tablespoon olive oil in pan and add onion. Sauté over medium heat for 3 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add vegetables, turn heat to medium/high, and sauté for 3 additional minutes. Remove vegetables to bowl with chicken. Add white wine to pan with heat still on medium/high, scrape up browned bits from bottom of pan, about 1 minute. Add chicken and vegetables back to the pan along with the chicken broth, salt, and thyme (if using dried). Bring broth to a simmer, place a large sheet of aluminum foil over the top of the pan, cover, and place in heated oven. After 30 minutes, add garlic and thyme (if using fresh). Cook another 15 minutes or until internal temperature of breast meat is 165 to 170 degrees. Serve with a small amount of liquid.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 1

A potent Jupiter/Pluto alignment sets the stage for an exciting month. September brings a time to make long-range plans, set new goals, explore new frontiers. Be sure to take time out for yourself in the next few days; reexamine your values, let go of past crises and traumas, free yourself of negative behavior, thinking. Formulate a game plan so that you can make significant changes in your life. Today the Libra moon aligns with Mars at 8:23 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Finish projects already begun, tie up loose ends and get an early start to the weekend.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2

The sun interacts with Jupiter and Pluto in the early morning hours, further highlighting the effect of this alignment. The moon enters Scorpio at 1:55 a.m., generating a serious, methodical mood. A lunar contact to Neptune can make for a slow-starting morning. Important insights or inspirations may come, if you have the quiet space and time to listen.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 3

A harmonious alignment of Venus and Neptune serves as a buffer to an intense Scorpio moon. Do something that brings beauty into your life and the lives of others today. The Scorpio moon forms challenging 90-degree contacts to Uranus at 11:04 a.m. and Mars at 6:13 p.m. It becomes inactive at 9:34 p.m. Give others lots of freedom and space. Instead of trying to transform external situations, this is a time to look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 4

The Jupiter-Pluto alignment occurs at 6:53 a.m., Jupiter at 10-degrees Gemini and Pluto at 10-degrees Sagittarius. The moon enters Sagittarius at 10:08 a.m. A lunar polarity to Saturn this morning may bring up serious issues that just won't go away, forcing you to make tough, realistic decisions. Influences lighten up in the afternoon and evening, when the moon interacts with Neptune and Venus. Kick back, relax and recharge your batteries.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

The Sagittarius moon aligns with Jupiter and Pluto in the morning. Stay calm and cool no matter what is happening around you. Don't take on more than you can handle. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 12:27 p.m., serving as a reminder that a full moon is building up and will culminate September 13. Potentially stressful planetary influences ease up considerably in the afternoon and evening. You can let off steam by pursuing favorite sports and hobbies.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6

Storm clouds have moved out, and sunny astrological weather prevails in the next few days. The Sagittarius moon forms a harmonious alignment to Mars this morning. If you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, you can be most productive. Pay extra attention to details so that you don't overlook something significant. At 6:26 p.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive until 9:47 p.m., when it enters conservative Capricorn.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. This is a day to get things done. The moon continues to travel in business-oriented Capricorn all day. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids mental focus and discipline. Zero in on financial or business matters; you can make sensible, realistic decisions today. Mercury enters Libra at 6:23 p.m., traveling there until September 28. One of the best periods of the month for beginning new ventures, signing contracts, making commitments begins at 6:23 p.m. and ends at 6:27 a.m. tomorrow.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

You must launch important enterprises before 6:27 a.m., when the Capricorn moon becomes inactive. Harmonious alignments of Venus to Pluto, Jupiter and Mercury to Saturn also occur today. Projects will come together easily. People will be cooperative, helpful, friendly. Influences are prime for finishing projects already begun, handling routine chores, tying up loose ends. You can be most productive. Plan a quiet evening.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

The moon enters Aquarius at 10:44 a.m., setting the stage for a relaxing, social weekend. Plan to visit or entertain friends. Get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. All parties, social gatherings are highlighted. Influences rate high for meeting people, establishing relationships or strengthening the ties in existing partnerships. A harmonious alignment of Mercury to Neptune also impacts the weekend. Follow your hunches; your instincts are on target. Pay attention to your dreams. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. You can achieve breakthroughs and express yourself in new ways.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

Take a vacation from stress, worry and responsibilities; be a free spirit today. An Aquarius moon may point you in new directions. Keep an open mind and go with the flow. Let fun and games top your agenda.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

The beginning of this week has its challenges. Stay busy with practical projects rather than getting caught up in worries, self-doubt, anger. There is a rough spot at 4:09 p.m., when the Aquarius moon opposes Mars and becomes inactive. Drive with care. The moon enters Pisces at 10:34 p.m., beginning the final windup to this month's full moon.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

The planet Saturn, standing at 1-degree Gemini, begins retrograde travel at 7:35 a.m. Saturn lends a serious, sobering energy to this full moon buildup. It brings a time to face the realities of a situation and deal with critical business or personal issues that can no longer be swept under the rug. The Pisces moon forms potentially stressful 90-degree alignments to Saturn, Pluto and Jupiter today. Plan a quiet evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep penetrating insights and find new meanings in life.

The Cat in the Colonial

"Seussical" translates the work of Dr. Seuss from page to stage

By Alexander Stevens
CNC ARTS WRITER

And now here is a Hoodwink
Who winks in his wink-hood.
Without a good wink-hood,
A Hoodwink can't wink good.

That excerpt from Dr. Seuss's "If I Ran the Circus" raises two questions about "Seussical," the musical stage production of the works of Dr. Seuss that makes its world premiere Aug. 27 at the Colonial Theatre, in Boston: how and why?

How do you stage a musical based on the elastic, gravity-and-logic-defying poetry of Dr. Seuss? And why turn it into a musical when it seems to fit so perfectly on the pages of a children's book?

After all, for many of us, Horton, the Cat in the Hat, and Bartholomew (who so wisely warned us about the Oobleck) all hold a place in our heart more near and dear than Huck Finn or that guy who told us to call him Ishmael. Anyone who futzes with the work of Dr. Seuss would be wise to remember that they're tampering with a writer perhaps remembered more fondly, more emotionally, than either Twain or Melville.

"I think, to a certain extent, you always have that feeling when you're adapting something," says Lynn Ahrens, who took the job of writing the lyrics of "Seussical" soon after finishing her Tony Award-winning work on "Ragtime." "In the musical theater, pretty much everything is an adaptation of someone else's material. But, having just finished 'Ragtime,' which is a very great novel, and having achieved a happy relationship with ['Ragtime' novelist] E. L. Doctorow, I thought, 'We'll, it can be done.'

"I treat everything I adapt with the utmost respect," she adds, during a lunch break at the Colonial, where the production grinds through the always-gruesome technical rehearsals. "I respect its spirit, its tone, its language, and what it's trying to say, and then I make it my own, with the deepest respect, but not with utter faithfulness, because that would be too limiting. You always have trepidation, but then you sort of offer up a prayer to Dr. Seuss, and go forward."

Adapting the work of Dr. Seuss (aka Theodore Seuss Gisel, who died in 1991), seems an even bigger challenge than adapting "Ragtime," because Seuss's impossible characters float as effortlessly as words can be read, but the stage is a comparatively clunky medium.

"No," says Ahrens, when asked if she ever feared that the Seuss stories would make a clumsy transition to the stage. "The stage is a format for the imagination. On stage, the mind has to work harder — I think that's the beauty of the medium."

And she gives an example of how "Seussical" relies on the magic of the stage.

"One of the main stories [in 'Seussical'] is 'Horton Hears a Who,' she says. "Horton's an elephant, and the Whos are essentially invisible — they live on a speck of dust. And there was a tremendous amount of debate about that with the designers, our director Frank Galati and [choreographer] Kathleen Marhsall. How do we do that? And I think we've done it in a tremendously imaginative way."

Their solution? They've done nothing. Instead of trying to fashion a special effect that could turn actors into "miniatures," they've decided to play it straight — actors play Horton and the Whos on stage at the same time. And Ahrens believes that because of the way the show is written, staged and acted, the audiences makes the adjustment in their own minds.

As for the why? — Why make a musical based on the works of Dr. Seuss? — Ahrens seems to not even understand the question. The idea of belittling or corrupting a story by "musicalizing" it never seems to even enter her mind, perhaps understandable for someone who makes their living with these conversions.

"I think there are certain subjects out there that I, personally, wouldn't want to turn into a musical, or wouldn't know how to," she says. "But I would never say that any story couldn't be turned into a musical."

And she's quick to point out all the qualities that make Dr. Seuss ripe for a musical interpretation.

"In reading the books, they're tremendously musical," she says. "Musical instruments abound, everyone's singing, everyone's dancing, and [the characters] are very kinetic. And we've been able to weave them into a story that has a tremendous amount of emotion, a surprising amount of tension, and action. Those are all wonderful elements for a musical, so why not?"

Although she re-teamed with her "Ragtime" composer Stephen Flaherty for this project, Ahrens was the key player in creating a Dr. Seuss story line for the show. She decided to take characters from a number of different stories, with "Horton Hears a Who" and "Horton Hatches an Egg" providing the backbone.

In this stage version, Horton tries to protect the microscopic planet that only he knows exists on a speck of dust. He's also trying to hatch the egg that was abandoned to him. Along the way he meets many familiar Seuss characters, including the Cat in the Hat and Gertrude McFuzz.

Ahrens and Flaherty actually found it quite liberating to create songs in Seuss's rule-less world. This world premiere opens about two years after the idea was initially proposed — a mere blink of an eye when compared with the gestation periods of most musicals — and Ahrens says the writing process was remarkably smooth.

Flaherty took full advantage of the opportunity — the more than 25 songs that comprise the score (the entire show is sung) reflect a crazy collection of musical styles that would perhaps only be possible in the world of Seuss.

"Stephen found a way to weave together everything from gospel, to r&b, to vaudeville, to a psychedelic Spike Jones, to power ballads," she says. "I don't think there's ever been a score that's been able to get away with as much, because [the stories] aren't rooted in an era or a literal time."

And if anyone can be trusted with this story, perhaps it's Ahrens — not just because she won a Tony Award for "Ragtime," but more importantly because she too was raised on Dr. Seuss.

"My mom used to read the stories out loud to me all the time," she remembers. "She would do the voices, so I have Horton's voice in my head from many years ago. And I remember the rhymes. I still quote them to my husband."

"Seussical" plays Aug. 27-Sept. 17, at the Colonial Theatre, in Boston. Tickets are $25-$75. Call (617) 931-2787.

Composer Stephen Flaherty and lyricist Lynn Ahrens, who won Tony Awards for their collaboration on "Ragtime," teamed up again to write "Seussical."

Pousette-Dart Band plays Plymouth Waterfront

the Project Arts concert series. "These are some of the biggest name performers we've had on the schedule since we began the concert series a few years ago and the show overall is a great way to wind down the 2000 summer season."

During the 70s, the Pousette-Dart Band gained an impressive — if not quite mass-scale audience when several tracks from its first two Capitol albums drew healthy airplay, most notably "What Can I Say" and "Halo" from the 1976 self-titled debut and "County Line" and the title track from the next year's follow-up, Amnesia. These four tracks alone covered a noteworthy stylistic range from jazz and Caribbean-flavored folk/pop to high-powered slide-guitar driven rock.

Never one to kowtow to music industry trends, Jon Pousette-Dart watched his band fade from the limelight as punk/new-wave and disco/dance-music took over the business in the early 80s. The singer/guitarist spent most of the following decade doing studio session work, playing and writing for both other artists' records and television and radio spots.

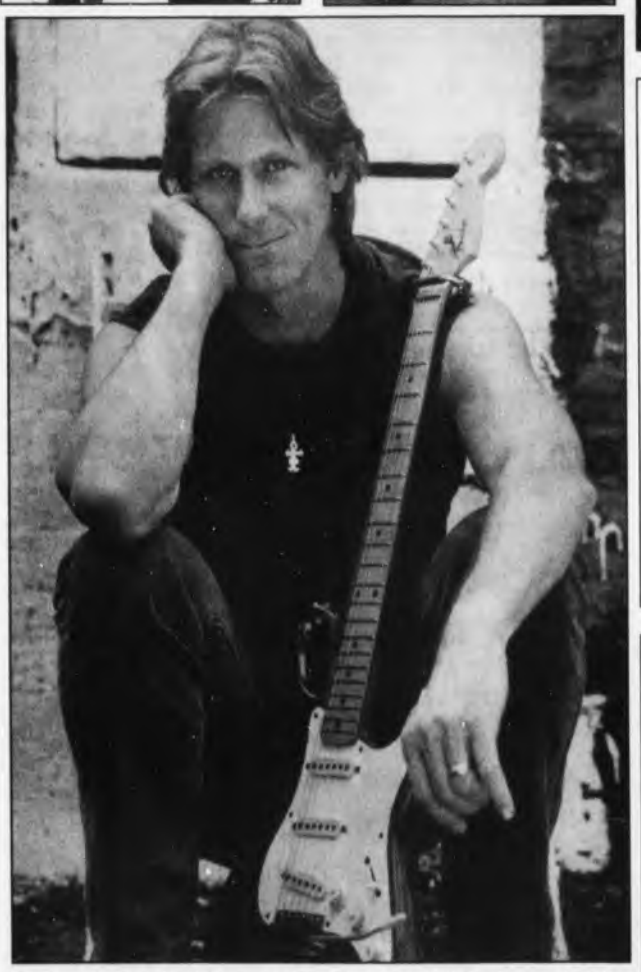
Along with sporadic reunions of his old band and a general return to performing live, Pousette-Dart was busy for much of the 90s with attempts to launch his own independent record label and recording company, partly as a creative outlet for himself and other like-minded musicians and artists, and partly as a reaction against major labels and trappings of the commercial record-making and marketing machine. The Pousette-Dart has a recently released solo CD, Put Down Your Gun, which fans and critics have praised as a disc true to his original sound.

Kerri Powers is familiar name to patrons of the Boston and South Shore area folk clubs and coffee-house venues. A uniquely styled singer, songwriter and guitarist, Powers' multi-faceted musical mix of Celtic, blues and contemporary folk styles is well-showcased on her early 90s independent disc, Sleepwalking Again. But most impressive is the singer's strong, emotive, Joan Baez-like voice, which is demonstrated by her frequently performed cover of the Beatles' "Let It Be" much like Baez' own folksy interpretation from a couple of decades ago.

The Susan Angeletti Band is a houserockin' blues/R&B sextet led by a dynamic singer and guitarist whose Bonnie Raitt/Janis Joplin-style vocals are cut from the a similar mold as those of another blues/R&B diva named Susan Tedeschi Landers.

Angeletti has her own confidence as well, with one recent independent CD release titled "Next Year's Model of the Blues."

The final show of the Project Arts 2000 concert series is a day-long festival for the Annual Muscular Dystrophy Association "Jerry Lewis Telethon" at South Park Drive in Plymouth on Monday, Sept. 4. Seven local bands will play the telethon including Jupiter Ray, Atlantic Blue, Cadillac Walk, and the Bermuda Strollers. For more information, call Nightlife Music at (508) 747-7727.



Jon Pousette-Dart, Kerri Powers and The Susan Angeletti Band are part of the musical menu at one of the Project Arts 2000 final concerts on the Plymouth Waterfront set for Wednesday, Aug. 30.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Home sales dip slightly in spring

Prices climb as inventory shrinks

A modest slowdown in single-family home sales occurred across the state in the spring.

The trend is attributed to higher mortgage rates, a downturn in the financial markets, and a dwindling supply of homes for sale locally.

Entry-level buyers were affected by the slowdown but sales of higher priced homes remained strong, according to the Mass. Association of Realtors (MAR).

Average selling prices for residential property continued to rise steadily in the second quarter however, with housing demand remaining healthy and activity in the trade-up and second home markets especially strong.

Selling prices were up about 20 percent over the spring of 1999 with demand out-pacing the inventory of available real estate.

Selling prices were up about 20 percent over the spring of 1999 with demand out-pacing the inventory of available real estate.

Across the state, the MAR report found 12,949 detached single-family homes were sold during the second quarter of 2000, a decline of 11.1 percent from 14,558 units sold in the same period a year ago.

Condominium sales also slipped from 3,838 in the second quarter of 1999 to 3,584 in the comparable quarter this year, a decrease of 6.6 percent.

For the first half of the year, detached home sales were down 11.5 percent, from 23,839 units in the first six months of 1999 to 21,104 in the same period this year. Meanwhile, condo sales slid 5.6 percent, from 6,258 units last year to 5,909 in 2000.

"This spring may not have been quite as busy as the last two were, but it hasn't been slow either," stated MAR President Fred Meyer.

"In terms of sales volume, activity may be down slightly, but, in many areas, buyers still outnumber listings with only a small let up in showings. Confidence in the housing market remains high among consumers. And, some have opted to diversify from riskier returns in stocks and mutual funds by investing in the purchase of a home," he said.

The 16,533 detached single-family homes and condos sold from April to June, make this spring the third busiest second quarter for residential housing activity in the state's history, surpassed only by the 17,878 single-family homes sold in the second quarter of 1998 and the 18,396 homes sold in the second quarter of 1999.

Regionally, in the second quarter, sales of detached single-family homes fell in all seven market areas of the state from year ago levels, but four regions - West (-2.3 percent), Northeast (-7.0 percent), Southeast (-8.0 percent) and Cape Cod (-9.0 percent) - saw only modest declines that were less than the statewide rate of decrease.

In addition, southeastern Mass. (+2.2 percent), Worcester County (+6.1 percent) and the state's four western most counties (+17.8 percent) each reported increased sales activity in the condo market over the second quarter of last year, while condo sales on Cape Cod were stable, declining by just three units.

"In the past few months, the market has become somewhat more price and interest rate sensitive," said Meyer, who noted that sales have eased considerably among first-time homebuyers, but risen steadily in the higher-priced trade-up and second home markets.

"Faced with higher mortgage costs and no equity to draw upon, many entry-level buyers are finding it difficult to meet today's down payment needs. For some, that means having to delay or scale back their home search by purchasing a smaller home or one farther away."
MAR President Fred Meyer

In fact, MAR data show sales of upper-end homes priced at or above $500,000 rose an amazing 38.6 percent in the second quarter of 2000 over the same period a year ago.

In contrast, sales of low- to moderately-priced single-family homes and condos valued at $300,000 or less declined 14 percent during the same period in the state.

The contradiction is due to rising mortgage rates (average of 8.39 percent for a 30-year fixed rate loan in second quarter 2000 vs. 7.26 percent in second quarter 1999), steady home price appreciation, and recent stock market declines, all of which have robbed young and low-to-moderate-income buyers of the power of their savings.

"Faced with higher mortgage costs and no equity to draw upon, many entry-level buyers are finding it difficult to meet today's down payment needs. For some, that means having to delay or scale back their home search by purchasing a smaller home or one farther away," Meyer said.

Adding to buyers' frustrations is the limited inventory of homes for sale. Statewide, single-family listings have declined 16.9 percent this past year, from 37,712 units in the second quarter of 1999 to 31,356 in the same quarter this year.

"The record-setting sales pace of the past four years has severely diminished the available housing supply, leaving some buyers, especially those at the lower-end, with little to choose from," Meyer explained.

Even though demand has cooled, it has not slowed the rate of increase in home prices, the MAR report notes. Specifically, the statewide average selling price for detached single-family homes rose 20.1 percent during the second quarter of the year, climbing from an average of $239,399 from April and June 1999 to $287,493 in the same quarter this year.

The statewide average selling price for condominiums also increased this past year, up 13.7 percent from an average price of $150,453 in the second quarter last year to $171,071 in the same period in 2000.

Locally, average selling prices of detached homes increased in every region of the state during the second quarter, with the more rural Central and West regions remaining the most affordable due to modest price gains of 11.1 percent and 8.9 percent respectively. In the condo market, every region but the Southeast saw selling prices rise in the second quarter.

"Demand remains very strong and supply remains very limited, so Economics 101 principles dictate prices will rise," Meyer said.

"The primary cause for the spike in average prices, however, is the boom in upscale, primary and second home sales, which have risen sharply this past year as baby-boomers and young executives cash in on financial investments and steady salary growth. The sale of just a few higher-priced homes has driven up the average selling price sharply."

IN BRIEF

Pat Villani awarded trip to Italy

Pat Villani

Coldwell Banker Hunneman announced that Pat Villani, manager of the South Shore Regional Hingham office of Coldwell Banker Hunneman recently spent a week in Italy in recognition of her exceptional performance and achievements during the past year.

William E. Kiley Jr., president of Coldwell Banker Hunneman, hosted the first-class trip for the award recipients, some of Coldwell Banker Hunneman's top-producers. Visiting Florence and Portifino, Coldwell Banker Hunneman associates began their European adventure in the hill town of Fiesole with a welcome dinner held in their honor at Villa San Michele. They also toured the medieval town of Lucca and enjoyed a boat excursion around the Tigullio Gulf with a visit to the charming fishing village of San Fruttuoso.

"Coldwell Banker Hunneman understands the importance of honoring the outstanding efforts of our employees and our annual trip is one example of how we distinguish their hard work and dedication," said Kiley. "I am pleased that we were able to recognize Pat for her achievements and extraordinary service."

Boston-based Coldwell Banker Hunneman has a network of more than 80 offices in eastern Massachusetts and southern New Hampshire, and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of NRT, Inc., the largest real estate company in the world.

Conway Relocation posts largest increase in national referral production

Conway Relocation Co. posted the largest gain in referral production during the second quarter of the year among companies of similar size across the country.

The 14-percent increase is a result of Conway agents sending a greater number of outgoing referrals — customers moving out of the Conway service area — to other members of the national RELO network, according to President of Corporate Services Maureen McCaffrey. RELO's production-level statistics are calculated through a formula based on the total number of referrals and the size of the company.

In the same period, Conway Relocation had the fifth-largest increase in closed sales through the relocation network, as well as the third largest increase in the number of outgoing referrals overall.

Conway Relocation Co.'s placement in the RELO report reflects the division's overall success during 2000, as McCaffrey reported volume is up 40 percent through the first six months of the year. She attributes the sales gains to teamwork between the Conway Relocation counselors and the realty firm's 600-plus sales agents.

"These figures are the best indication of how hard our agents and staff work every day," McCaffrey said. "We're proud that their efforts are being recognized through RELO's national rankings."

Chicago-based RELO, the highest-producing national relocation network, is comprised of nearly 1,000 independent companies with 90,000 sales associates serving 15,000 communities. RELO members have a collective annual sales volume of $212 billion.

Colorful blooms for the late summer landscape

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

Part 1—butterfly bushes, mallows and Rose-of-Sharon

As the month of August draws to a close, many landscapes lose their appeal with fewer blooms to add color to our perennial borders or foundation plantings. Although container gardens and plantings of annuals should be reaching maximum impact during the latter half of the growing season, this summer's relative lack of warmth and sunshine, accompanied by perpetual dampness, has taken its toll on some of these multicolored additions. A panorama of primarily monochromatic green foliage has resulted for many landscapes, although this is, admittedly, a welcome change from the basic beige palette we endured during last year's drought.

A great majority of our more popular woody landscape plants tend to produce their flowers during the spring season. Forsythia, azaleas, rhododendrons, dogwoods, cherries, pears, lilacs and crabapples create magnificent displays during May and June. There are several notable shrubs and trees; however, which reach peak color by summer's end including the butterfly bushes (Buddleia), mallows and Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus spp.), sweet pepperbush (Clethra), blue mist shrub (Caryopteris), hydrangeas and sourwood (Oxydendrum).

Butterfly bushes, appropriately nicknamed summer lilacs, are available in a wide range of flower colors including pink, lavender, blue and purple. Irresistible to butterflies, hummingbirds and the fascinating hummingbird moth, they tolerate a wide range of soil and light conditions, blooming prolifically from late July until frost. Remove spent flowers to encourage side shoots to bloom. As they bloom on new wood, these shrubs should be pruned drastically in early spring to a foot or two in height to promote denser growth and more flowers and to help keep them a manageable size. In particularly harsh winters, they may die to the ground, but they usually sprout new growth from the base and flower by August. For those who are not conscientious weeders, offspring will often emerge and form sizeable, blooming shrubs in a two-year time span. Cultivars such as Buddleia "Pink Delight" and "Black Knight" may produce huge panicles and become 9-foot specimens but there are more compact growers with smaller blossoms and more diminutive foliage including "Nanho Purple," "Nanho White" and "Petite Indigo."

Colorful blooms

Few plants rival the showy blooms of the flamboyant rose mallow (Hibiscus moscheutos). Perhaps more correctly categorized as a woody-based perennial rather than a shrub, established clumps produce woody canes 5-feet high by 5-feet wide. Broad, circular blooms may reach dramatic proportions of up to 10 inches across in shades of pink, red and white, many of which display a contrasting red eye. Provide these tropical-looking plants a moisture-retentive, well-drained soil in full sun to which lime has been added for a more neutral pH. Patience is required each spring as new growth rarely appears until late May or early June from the base of the plant. Old canes will not produce flowers or foliage in subsequent years and can be cut down in autumn but are sometimes best left until spring to mark the plant's location.

Numerous rose mallow cultivars have been developed including: the "Southern Belle Series" (10-inch pink, white or red flowers); "Lady Baltimore" (pink with red centers) and "Lord Baltimore" (glowing red); and the "Disco Belle Series," 20-inch, compact growers often treated as annuals. My newest acquisition is a spectacular cultivar, "Kopper King," with deep bronze foliage and a huge white flower highlighted by a burgundy center. Both the butterfly bush and rose mallow are somewhat coarse, wild-looking plants, often better suited for the back of the perennial border than a formal foundation planting.

Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus) has been grown since colonial times. Flowers may be single or double in shades of pink, white, red, purple or blue.

Do not confuse these hardy Hibiscus with the tropical varieties (Hibiscus rosa-sinensis) which have shiny, deep-green leaves and require temperatures consistently above 50 degrees in order to survive. These magnificent tropical plants can be summered out-of-doors, but they must be relocated to a sunny window or greenhouse once cooler temperatures prevail in fall, several weeks prior to a killing frost.

Rose-of-Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus) has been grown since colonial times. Like the mallow, it is late to break dormancy in the spring. Flowers may be single or double in shades of pink, white, red, purple or blue. Many selections exhibit contrasting-colored eyes. Reaching a height of up to 15 feet at maturity, these summer-blooming shrubs, which can be trained to produce a small tree, will readily adapt to a wide range of growing conditions including part shade, city pollution, and seashore environments. Spring pruning is preferable as plants bloom on new wood. Moisture-retentive soils should be provided, particularly for the double-flowering forms. Each flower lasts only a day, but an established shrub will continue to produce innumerable elegant blooms from late July until frost.

Prime Real Estate

Beyond compare

This magnificent antique home offers 16 rooms, five to seven bedrooms, three and one-half baths, six fireplaces — all this on 11-plus acres of gorgeous land in the Church Hill area.

Professionally landscaped lot has stonewalls, brick walkways, blue stone patio, perennials, mature plantings and in-ground Gunite pool.

A separate five-room suite features two bedrooms, fireplaced living room, kitchen and family room for au pair or extended family use.

The main house is loaded with period detail and charm — pine floors, built-ins, beamed ceilings, window seats, moldings, as well as every modern convenience a family would want — tile floors w/radiant heat, second-floor laundry, custom cherry cabinet kitchen w/sunroom overlooking patio and pool — very bright and welcoming. Attached barn and garage complete the "Norman Rockwell" feeling.

Information is current as of Aug. 25, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points;APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate+total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. New Releases

THE ART OF WAR (R) Convoluted, dark, dank and pointless, this deals with a UN covert operation, international trade and gizmos (so we'll be entertained). Donald Sutherland survives, as the UN honcho, but Wesley Snipes, who hasn't been first-rate on screen since his great drag role in "To Wong Foo ...," is grim and awful. (D.B.) D

THE BALLAD OF RAMBLIN' JACK (Unrated) As a traditional folk singer, Ramblin' Jack Elliott has carved out a major reputation over the past four decades. But he's even a better storyteller, hence his nickname. This documentary look at him — by his daughter — shows all of that, but also focuses on the shaky father-daughter relationship that's been haunting her most of her life. A tad long, but fascinating, with some outstanding music. (E.S.) B+

BRING IT ON (PG-13) White high school cheerleaders learn that their routines have been ripped off from a black squad, and try to compete with new material. Fitful stabs at contending with race and class issues, but mainly it's a fun take on hotties, of both genders, great teeth and gently suggestive situations. With Kirsten Dunst, and Jessie Bradford as the loopy-grinned cuties who craves her. (D.B.) C

THE CREW (PG-13) Grumpy old criminals (Richard Dreyfuss, Burt Reynolds, Dan Hedaya, Seymour Cassel) in over their heads in South Beach, Miami. The mob is out to get them, and they're stuck with a rich lady (Lanie Kazan) and a stripper (Jennifer Tilly). Hit or miss, with Reynolds unimpressive, the other guys effective. No sweat, no fuss. (D.B.) C+

STEAL THIS MOVIE (R) An adulatory bio-pic, really agitprop, about '60s radical Abbie Hoffman (a believable Vincent D'Onofrio) and his coterie, including wife (Janeane Garofalo), girlfriend (Jeanne Tripplehorn) and lawyer (Kevin Pollack). Saddled with an unconvincing Nixon voice-over, and weighted entirely on the side of the manic-depressive Hoffman, the movie nicely evokes the era, its music and its delusions. (D.B.) C+

TITANIC TOWN (PG-13) Another tale of the troubles in Northern Ireland, set in 1972. An ordinary housewife (Julie Walters) becomes an agitator for peace, though her Catholic neighbors regard her as a traitor. Her sweet daughter falls for a lad who turns out to be an IRA operative. Poignant at times, but haven't we seen this before ... often? (D.B.) B-

Ongoing

ALICE AND MARTIN (R) A handsome, troubled young man (Alexis Loret) and a beautiful young woman (Juliette Binoche) finally figure out that they're in love. But he bears a terrible secret, a crime unpunished, and it nearly drives him mad. Beautifully photographed, ably written, acted with varying degrees of competence, the latest film from Andre Techine. (D.B.) B

AUTUMN IN NEW YORK (PG-13) A doomed romance between an aging lothario (Richard Gere, silver locks flowing majestically) and a waifish, mortally ill gamine (Winona Ryder), beautifully photographed and situated in Gotham, in all seasons (not just autumn). But it's prosaically written, awkwardly acted, and miserably misconceived. (D.B.) C-

BUTTERFLY (R) Spain, 1936, on the verge of Civil War, from the perspective of a bright young boy (Manuel Lozano) who is mentored by an old school teacher (Fernando Fernan Gomez) who has left-leaning, maybe even communist sympathies. The beauty of the tale is jarringly shaken by the tough ending. An impressive format for an interesting idea. (D.B.) B

CECIL B. DEMENTED (R) A spoof of "independent" flicks, starring Stephen Dorff, hair all a-flutter, in the starring role, with Melanie Griffith and a major Hollywood star whom he and his gang kidnap and force to appear as the lead in their current, abominably lame, movie. Hit and miss, more miss than hit, featuring writer-director John Waters' usual love-hate relationship with Baltimore and indifference to the usual rules. (D.B.) C

THE CELL (R) Overly long, but graced by state-of-the-art computer-generated f/x, this combines a detective story, which would sustain it on its own, with sci-fi nonsense about getting into the minds of comatose people. Starring Jennifer Lopez, looking smashing, Vince Vaughn as a cop, Vincent D'Onofrio, Pruitt Taylor Vance and Marianne Jean-Baptiste. (D.B.) D+

CHUCK & BUCK (R) A young man, Buck (Michael White), whose mother has just died, reconnects with his childhood best friend, Chuck (Chris Weitz), who has moved on and married. Buck remembers their adolescent fooling around, sexually, and wants to rekindle a flame that has, in Chuck's mind, definitely gone out. A poignant little picture about the perils of not growing up. (D.B.) B-

THE EYES OF TAMMY FAYE (PG-13) A revealing documentary about the make-up-obsessed ex-wife of televangelist and serial weeper Jim Bakker, showing her to best advantage, and evangelist and operator Jerry Falwell to worst advantage. A real rags to riches to rags story. The remarried Tammy Faye comes across as the genuine article, truly a believing Christian and the eternal optimist. (D.B.) B-

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

The members of the crew need a little excitement in their dreary Miami lives.

The Crew (C+)

After grumpy old astronauts ("Space Cowboys"), why not grumpy old wise guys? Why not indeed. For that unwanted demographic, adults — unwanted by the perpetrators of contemporary TV shows and the movies if not by their "send money!" offspring — any film that gives senior actors a chance to pay the mortgage and an opportunity to strut their stuff on camera can be counted as at least a presumptive blessing. Would that "The Crew" had the pizzazz of "Space Cowboys," though the latter lacked an arresting senior female character, and "The Crew" has Lanie Kazan, trading again on her Jewish big momma routine, to fitful effect. The irrepressible Kazan plays Pepper Lowenstein, whose husband made his fortune with deli delights and who now lives, widowed but not without her comforts, in a big mansion, craved by her stepdaughter, Ferris (Jennifer Tilly), who ... but I get ahead of myself.

Our heroes are retired mafiosi, or the next best thing to mafiosi — wise guys, in any case, if not necessarily made men — winding out their uneventful days in a ratty South Beach, Miami, hotel, where vacancies are precipitated by the elderly conveniently dying at a rapid pace, the better to provide opportunities for the young and the beautiful to move in and jack up the rents. For them, a night on the town is the Friday night early bird special at the fast food joint they frequent.

One night they try to finesse the line waiting to get in by 5 o'clock by slipping the waiter a dollar bill — it's like the ad on TV featuring French Stewart doing the same thing at a fancy restaurant and explaining all the telephone goodies you can get for a buck — but winding up out on the street again.

They need a life and decide to get one by shooting up a corpse, conveniently available at a morgue where one of their crew, Brick (Dan Hedaya), works, placing him in the lobby of their residence, thus frightening would-be tenants and lowering the rent. Problem is that the corpse is that of the daddy of a drug lord; second problem is that another of our guys, Mouth (Seymour Cassel), who never talks except when he spills his guts to a hooker (Tilly), tells her what he and his buddies have done, whereupon she says she'll spill the beans to the law unless they off her mother-in-law.

Too much plot — another of the crew, Bobby (Richard Dreyfuss), is hunting for his daughter, who happens to be a cop (Carrie-Anne Moss), who's feuding with her scummy ex (Jeremy Piven); the drug lord (Miguel Sandoval) comes for revenge; another of our boys, Bats (Burt Reynolds), has to be knocked out before he comes up with ideas — and only intermittent bits that succeed: not a recipe for a major hit.

The jibes at the expense of Hispanics and Jews won't lead to ethnic warfare in the streets but they're not exactly fresh and perky, and the travails of geezers can only carry a movie so far. Miami doesn't look its best, the stars do what they can but seem exhausted and Kazan gets all the best lines. Oy.

When will airlines wise up?

Ask George

By George Hobica
FORCE 5 NEWS SERVICE

Q. I work for a small company and when I travel to London they don't pay for business class. Since I'm 6 feet 4 inches, the coach cabin is pretty cramped. To make matters worse, last time I flew to London, I was sitting next to someone who paid $298 RT. My coach ticket was over $2,200 RT, yet we got the same service, seat and food — none of which was outstanding.

You'd think the airlines would wise up and give travelers who pay full fare something extra. Thanks for letting me vent.

A. This is a frustrating experience, both for domestic and international travelers. Some airlines are trying to do something about it. Domestically, United offers extra legroom for full-fare frequent flyers. Overseas, British Airways has just launched World Traveller Plus, which offers a separate cabin with 5 inches of extra legroom compared to regular economy (currently, this cabin is available only on New York-London and San Francisco—London flights, but will be expanded to other routes over the next year or two). Fares are the same as for unrestricted full-fare economy.

Virgin Atlantic has had a full-fare economy cabin on its routes between the United States and London for several years. As far as I know, no U.S. airline has anything equivalent.

Q. I flew United recently and my flight was canceled due to a "shortage" of pilots (it seems the pilots are staging some kind of work slowdown). United refused to put me on another airline's flight to my destination. I thought that under "Rule 240" of the contract of carriage they were obligated to do so.

A. Many years ago, when airlines were regulated, the Department of Transportation promulgated Rule 240 to protect passengers in the event of a flight irregularity. After deregulation, many airlines adopted Rule 240-type language in their contracts of carriage. Some still protect passengers in the event of most types of flight irregularity (they'll put you on another airline if they can't get you to your destination because of mechanical and certain other problems).

United, in its Rule 240, is not obligated to put you on another airline if the problem is caused by a "force majeure" event, like a hurricane or other weather event, war, riot, nuclear explosion or any other "Act of God".

The dictionary defines "force majeure" as an unexpected or uncontrollable event. While it's true that some airline pilots may think they're gods, the job action by United's pilots is really an "Act of Man." And it was neither unexpected nor uncontrollable.

So, to lump it in with a riot or war hardly seems fair to me. Under its Rule 240, United's only responsibility is to refund your money in the event of a delay (15 minutes or more) or cancellation, even on a nonrefundable ticket. However, some United service agents are attempting to rebook passengers on other flights, even though they're not required to. It's up to the discretion of the agent. But until United's pilots and management get together on this, I'd avoid flying them altogether.

Q. This is in response to the letter from the person who said that writing to an airline's customer service department does no good. About two years ago, we had a lot of problems with an America West flight, including a nasty, unhelpful ticket agent. I wrote a detailed letter (including names of the rude people) and copied it to everyone concerned (about 40 people from the president and CEO to the VP of maintenance).

Within a week, the president's assistant contacted me and explained that they would provide additional training in customer service to the rude people. She also sent two $100 vouchers, which we never used — that was not why I had written the letters.

I just wanted you to know that sometimes you will get results by writing. You just have to get their attention.

A. Thanks for sharing your experience. Although the reader to whom you're referring didn't get results, usually if you're persistent and have a legitimate gripe, you'll get some kind of compensation.

Maybe, someday, the airlines will follow Amtrak's lead and provide full refunds if you're unhappy with any aspect of your trip.

I recently rode on Amtrak and my train was two hours late due to a downed power line, which wasn't really Amtrak's fault. Without being asked, they refunded the fare of everyone on the train. Airlines, hello?!

Greenbush powwow with governor slated

Sept. 19 meeting to include Braintree and Weymouth

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset town officials received some good news regarding its requested meeting with Governor Paul Cellucci, but also some surprising news.

Cellucci agreed on a date to meet with three representatives from Cohasset, as well as three from Scituate, to hear concerns about the proposed restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line on the South Shore. However, Cohasset and Scituate will have to make room at the table for Weymouth and Braintree officials who were also invited to attend the meeting by Sen. Bob Hedlund (R-Weymouth).

The private meeting to be held in the Governor's State House corner office on Sept. 19, Primary Day, at 11:45 a.m. is expected to last between 45 minutes and an hour, said Hedlund.

But some Cohasset officials are upset with the inclusion of Braintree and Weymouth. Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said he was disappointed, saying the towns had not asked for a meeting with them.

In July, Callahan and Scituate Board of Selectmen Chairman Ralph Crossen jointly signed a letter asking Hedlund to set up a meeting with the governor, after the MBTA

South Shore's first lady of politics to be honored

UMass/Boston fund named after Polly Logan

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Come Monday the tables will be turned on Cohasset's Polly Logan.

That's because Logan is usually the one doing the hosting. In other words, she meets, greets and sets the stage for myriad current and potential public officials at a range of events during any given year.

But on Sept. 11 at Boston's Fairmont Copley Plaza, the Republican activist will be feted by the likes of Gov. Paul Cellucci and Lt. Gov. Jane Swift — and all for a good cause. Proceeds from the event will benefit The Polly Logan Fund for the Center for Women in Politics and Public Policy at the University of Massachusetts Boston.

Anyone who knows Logan realizes she's most comfortable behind the scenes. But that's not to say she isn't an adept public speaker herself. When introducing someone, she relays the highlights of his or her résumé to the crowd with a combination of infectious enthusiasm and the ease of a seasoned politician.

That's just someone like Jim Claypoole, who has called Logan a friend for more than 30 years, finds so attractive about Logan.

"There's always a smile on her face," says Claypoole, who is vice chairman of the Hingham Republican Town Committee and who met Logan while working on a political campaign. "She's intelligent, has tenacity and seizes the initiative.

"Those characteristics would epitomize any leader," he says. "So it is appropriate that this institution would perpetuate all the things that Polly stands for."

The purpose of the Center – which is nonpartisan — is to get more women involved in public life both as public officials and in policy-making roles, according to director Elizabeth A. Sherman, Ph.D.

"Only a small number of women

Cohasset native aims for the stars

Accepted into NASA astronaut program

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

For the next year and a half, Stephen Bowen will be going back to school. Though he already has degrees from the United States Naval Academy and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, his next educational experience will help him aim for the stars — literally.

"I watched all the Apollo flights, Skylab, the early shuttle missions. I watched Neil Armstrong walk on the moon at the age of five."

— Stephen Bowen, astronaut

Bowen, a lieutenant commander in the US Navy, is one of the 17-member astronaut class tagged by NASA to become the next generation of Neil Armstrongs and Sally Rides.

Fourteen men and three women, representing all four branches of the nation's military, as well as private industry and academia, will spend the next 18 months undergoing intense mental and physical preparation for possible future assignments to missions involving the space shuttle and space station.

"This is a tremendous opportunity. I'm pretty excited," said Bowen in a phone interview from Texas' Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center — better known as "Houston" during space missions.

Bowen grew up in Cohasset and is a member of the Class of 1982. He was a goaltender on the Skipper hockey team that was a state semi-

The historic Winslow House in Marshfield, where the legendary Daniel Webster had his law office, will be the scene of "democracy in action" Monday night, Sept. 11, as the two Democratic state senate candidates take to the podium.

Jim Cantwell of Weymouth, an environmental attorney, and Ted LeClair of Marshfield, a businessman and part owner of a cranberry company, will face off at 7 p.m. in a debate moderated by the League of Women Voters. A panel of journalists will question the candidates.

The event, sponsored by Community Newspaper Company in cooperation with WATD radio, is free and the public is invited to attend. The debate will be broadcast live on WATD at 95.9. People can also log on to the CNC website at townonline.com/south to submit questions during the debate. A portion of the debate format will be devoted to questions from online users as well as those in attendance. The candidates have also been invited to stay after the debate for a live, online chat at townonline.com.

Cantwell and LeClair are vying for their party's nomination in the Sept. 19 primary election. The winner of the primary will go up against incumbent Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, in the Nov. 7 general election.

Both candidates this week share their reasons for agreeing to the debate and what they hope to see as an outcome of the debate. (Profiles of Cantwell and LeClair also appear in this issue.)

LeClair stressed the importance of getting his message out to the voters.

"The biggest reason I agreed to the debate is it gives me an opportunity to let the voters hear why I am running for office. It's another opportunity to get the message out," LeClair said. "If you're tired of having lawyers and lobbyists run the government, you can get out there and vote for someone who believes government can work. You have an opportunity on the 19th to show you are not represented by lawyers and lobbyists."

LeClair anticipates the issues dominating the debate will be education, health care, and the redevelopment of the decommissioned South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

Absentee ballots

Absentee ballots for the state primary Sept. 19, are now available at the town clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Monday, Sept.18, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. Residents may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the town clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democratic, Republican or Libertarian, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party that he is enrolled. However, if a voter is Unenrolled (Independent), he may choose his ballot and after voting will be returned to the unenrolled status without having to file a certificate. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the town clerk's office by Sept.19, to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

Those who are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast their vote at the polling place may file a letter from their physician with their town clerk, stating that they are permanently unable to cast their vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot to be signed and returned will be mailed to them by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) is sponsoring a community workshop to discuss infrastructure improvement ideas for Cohasset Village on Thursday, Sept. 14, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School auditorium.

The CRC and the town of Cohasset jointly hired the Cecil Group, a Boston-based landscape architectural firm, to undertake an infrastructure improvement study for the village. The Cecil Group has partnered with the BSC Group engineering firm to develop proposals for such items as improved parking, new sidewalks, enhanced pedestrian and vehicle circulation, additional greenspace, increased signage, and the removal of overhead utility lines.

The CRC urges all interested community members to attend and share their thoughts and ideas on present conditions in the village, as well as improvement ideas for the future. Whether you have specific suggestions, want the village to remain the same, or would like to have a better understanding of the revitalization program, the CRC welcomes your participation.

For more information on this public forum, or the revitalization program, call 383-2449, or stop by the CRC office located at 87 Elm St.

Americans with Disabilities Act bringing about changes

By Rick Collins and Seth Jacobson
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In the 10 years since its passage, the Americans with Disabilities Act has managed to make the lives of many people with various disabilities easier and just a bit more comfortable.

And what's more, towns on the South Shore all seem to be catching on to the fact that ADA compliance is no joke. A survey of the 351 municipalities in the state which was recently conducted by the Massachusetts Office on Disability indicated towns on the South Shore and other communities in The Commonwealth are becoming more responsible regarding ADA compliance.

"Among other things, the ADA has brought an understanding that people with disabilities have civil rights," said Lorraine Grief, director of the office on disability, "and that communities in the Commonwealth have certain obligations to uphold those rights."

In Cohasset, it is widely thought that the town has done a good job in bringing its municipal buildings into compliance.

Bob Egan is not only the town's building inspector, but also in charge of making sure Cohasset is ADA compliant. He said the town's buildings have either already undergone, or will be undergoing renovations to make them 100 percent ADA compliant in the near future. According to Egan, Town Hall and the police and fire stations are already compliant. The new Osgood School, which opened in September of 1998, was designed to be fully compliant, and the pending renovations to the Middle/High School, the Deer Hill School, as well as the new town library to be constructed at the site of the old Osgood School, will also bring those buildings into compliance.

"I think having public buildings compliant is a big thing," he said. "It says a lot when you have made your buildings accessible. It makes a statement that you're concerned, that you're willing to do enough."

Town Manager Mark Haddad echoed Egan's comments. "I think we've taken great steps to that goal [of full compliance]," he said. "We're going to spend $2.9 million to [move] the library and make it fully-handicapped complaint, $41.8 million to renovate the Middle/High School…We've already spent $10 million on the Osgood.

"The town has made a financial commitment to handicap accessibility."

In July, the office on disability's state-wide survey checking for ADA compliance was completed. It was the first ADA survey initiated by the group since 1995. A survey was also done in 1988.

Greiff said earlier this year, ADA surveys were sent out to all the communities in Massachusetts. A total of 289 communities responded. South Shore towns, which did not respond to the survey, include Rockland and Weymouth.

"We still consider that (289) a really high response," Greiff said.

Greiff said the results of the most recent survey indicated that "86 percent of our municipalities have accessible city or town halls compared to 57 percent in 1995 and 44 percent in 1988. Eighty-four percent of police departments are accessible as compared to 57 percent in 1995 and 44 percent in 1988. Physical access to municipal meetings is available in 90 percent of communities as opposed to 82 percent in 1995 and 86 percent in 1998."

One roadblock in the path of total compliance is cost. In Cohasset, part of the reason the town decided to move the library to the former Osgood School site on the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road, is the cost it would've taken to renovate the current Paul Pratt Library building.

"It would've been quite substantial," said selectman Fred Koed. "Plus there was the issue of lack of parking.

"I think the town as a whole is trying to do what it can, but the costs can be quite large…The only thing that holds back progress is cost."

Lance Norris, a Norfolk Road resident who walks with the aid of a cane as a result of a severe knee injury, and was for a while in a wheelchair, said the lack of complaints to the town about accessibility must be a good sign. And though he still sees problems especially with small businesses, he does recognize the costs that come along with full compliance.

"It says a lot when you have made your buildings accessible. It makes a statement that you're concerned, that you're willing to do enough."

— Bob Egan, Cohasset building commissioner

"If I was in a wheelchair now, just going downtown, 70 percent of the stores are probably inaccessible, which is a problem. But with businesses like 'Cards and Shards' what are you going to do, hit them with a $50,000 construction bill to put a ramp in?" he asked.

According to Egan, state law says any time a business makes a renovation costing 25 percent of the property's assessed value, it must install ADA compliant entrances and bathrooms.

"Things do look like they are getting a lot better," Greiff added. "We're nowhere near done in our efforts, but we're pleased with the way things are progressing. It's all about different communities using common sense."

Because one person's common sense doesn't necessarily make sense to someone else, Norris said that's why committees like the town's Commission on Disabilities are needed. The commission was thrust back into the limelight recently when Norris asked to be on the committee, but conflicting views were given over the status of the group. After talking with committee chairman Frances Andrews, Norris had the feeling the committee had been disbanded. At the last selectmen's meeting, the board, which didn't realize the committee had disbanded, voted to reinstate it, with Norris on board.

However, Andrews recently sent a letter to the town, as well as the Mariner (see letters to the editor), saying "It was a surprise to learn in the Cohasset Mariner that the Commission on Disabilities has been disbanded, and that I was the one who did the disbanding."

She continued to say because committee membership had dropped, as well as community interest, the group had been working in an unofficial manner.

However, she concluded by saying she was pleased to hear of Norris's interest, and hoped to bring a "viable commission" to Cohasset; a statement agreed to by Norris, Haddad and Koed.

"I don't know what the solution is (to making small businesses ADA compliant), but that is exactly why they have these boards," said Norris, who was sworn onto the committee this past Tuesday.

"It's mostly a resource to the town on any remodeling or any new projects we do," said Koed. "They can look over them and make suggestions that make it easier for the handicapped."

"I'm glad to get the commission on disabilities up and running again," Haddad said. "We sort of dropped the ball by not helping it more…I think we need to make a commitment."

For more information on ADA regulations and the recent survey call the Massachusetts Office on Disability at (800) 322-2020.

Residents express concern over Little Harbor bylaw violation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Repeated violations of a quirky bylaw governing Little Harbor has caused some area residents consternation when using the inlet's calm, protected waters.

Beach Street resident Lincoln Bloomfield said while out sailing a couple of weeks ago, he was nearly "dashed against the rocks" and was hit in the head with his boom, thanks to a wake left by motor boat and skier.

The problem is, in 1978, Town Meeting approved a bylaw that prohibits boats from towing "water skis, aqua-planes, or any other similar device except on even numbered days" in Little Harbor. However, according to Bloomfield and David Weltman of Gammons Road, the bylaw has been violated for years.

"Compliance of the law has been mostly spotty," said Bloomfield. "Some day we're going to have an accident and it's unnecessary because we have a law."

The bylaw was partly Bloomfield's creation. When water skiing peaked in popularity in the 1970's, Bloomfield said the water in Little Harbor was crossed-up by conflicting uses. "Twenty-five years ago, sailors, kayakers and kids in canoes and water skiers were all ruining each others day," he said. "It got to the point where it was intolerable."

Bloomfield petitioned the town in 1977 to enact a bylaw that he thought would be a "compromise" to the problem. "I got everyone on Beach Street. We wanted to find an equitable solution to a dangerous mix of incompatible uses."

Though the harbormaster at the time vowed to enforce it, Bloomfield said, "we haven't made much progress."

Because the only point of access to the harbor is under Cunningham's Bridge on Atlantic Avenue under right tide conditions, enforcement of the law is largely left up to the residents, which brings mixed results.

"Some of us on occasion have gone out to the speed boat on odd days and tell them they are violating the law," said Bloomfield. "In some cases they took it seriously, other times I was laughed at, mostly by teenagers having fun."

To Weltman, the significance of the bylaw, as well as the ban on jet skis that he helped push though a number of years ago, is to try and "balance interests."

With kayakers, canoeists and small-craft sailors needing the calm protected waters more than the power boaters, Weltman doesn't see the problem with asking them to take it outside.

"The point is, people can water ski anywhere. There are very few places that are becalmed so you can fish, canoe, kayak or sail," he said. "I don't really think we're asking people to make sacrifices – almost no one [water skiing] lives on Little Harbor. I think they're mostly doing it from outside...Those boats have access to the other parts of the ocean."

The question is whether people are just ignorant of the law, or blatantly violating it.

"I think most people who come in, do so with the knowledge it exists, but without any concern of being apprehended," said Weltman, who has been approached by Harbormaster John Winters for deputization, but not yet received it. "If there was someone deputized living there, like everything else, it would be more seriously adhered to."

Bloomfield opened the door a little to the possibility the law has not been publicized well-enough, but shut that door again very quickly. "Maybe a lot of people do not know what the law is. But ignorance of the law is not an excuse," he said.

"The law hasn't been posted in a number of years, so it's sort of generally everyone's fault," Bloomfield said. "There is a whole new generation that doesn't know the law. But kids are having fun and their fun is not to be interrupted, though they're robbing others of their rights."

He said he has spoken of the problem to the harbormaster who expressed interest in bringing the problem under control. "I think if he or his assistant were to come down here on an odd-numbered weekend, I bet they could collect a number of fines," said Bloomfield.

Winters did not return phone calls to comment on this article.

AROUND TOWN

HELLO EVERYONE

Well, the temperatures have lowered a bit and school has begun! Please remember to slow down a bit as children are waiting for and getting on and off school buses! As you drive and walk around town these days, don't forget to take in all the wonderful sights and colors that are abundant wherever you go. I received a great note from a wonderful citizen here in our town who wanted to remain anonymous. As you will read, he has truly taken the time to "stop and smell the roses", so often we get so caught up in the day-to-day issues, that we forget to look around and see what is around us, the smells, colors and beauty that are right here in our town.

A QUICK TOUR

In the spirit of the title of this column, townspeople should take a quick tour "Around Town" before the change of seasons wipes out all the beautiful bloom along some of the town's streets. Here are just a few... Going from north to south on Main Street, note the giant sunflowers which are seldom seen these days...On North Main Street at Cedar Street, then catch Don Harrold's luxuriant old-fashioned front yard garden at the corner of Rocky Lane. Continuing south on the other side of the Village, you shouldn't miss the bright displays of oxide daisies(Black-eyed Susans) across from St. Anthony's parking lot and then the back of a white fence on the left, after the next rise. Still moving south, there's a fence of ever-blooming roses and finally the spectacular mounds of impatiens around trees at the corner of Beechwood Street.

MORE IMPATIENS

If you are looking for impatiens you shouldn't miss the showings of these blooms at the two Roy Estates on Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road... all of which will disappear overnight with the first frost. On this ride, you will pass the well-tended floral decoration of the horse trough at Beach Street... and farther along, a showing of pink geraniums and orange marigolds at a house on the Straits Pond side of Jerusalem Road. A little off the beaten path is a bed of Calla lilies blooming in front of a house on Howe Road. Perhaps, you can find some others. What a wonderful letter to receive!

ON KATIE'S TEAM

Katie Egan will soon celebrate her 12th birthday and her biggest challenge right now, according to her parents Bob and Ginny Egan, is adjusting to middle school. (Bob is our building inspector here in Cohasset). Katie and her parents are grateful to Children's Hospital and the Jimmy Fund Clinic of the Dana Farber Cancer Institute for love, support and life-saving treatment. You see, two years ago Katie was diagnosed with Ewings Sarcoma, a childhood cancer that attacks muscle and bone. Following the diagnosis, Katie endured major surgery and a year of chemotherapy. She is in remission and is followed closely with check ups, scans and tests every three months.

This is how you can help Katie and other children like her.

On Sept. 24, the Egans will participate in their second Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk to raise funds for Dana Farber. Their motivation is to pay back in some small way for the gift they have received and to support Dana Farber so that miracles continue for other children. Their inspiration is Katie and all the children of the Jimmy Fund Clinic, whose spirit, determination and strength are beyond understanding.

If you can support the Egans in this year's Jimmy Fund Walk, checks made payable to "Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk" may be sent to Bob and Ginny Egan, 17 Bradley Woods Dr., Hingham 02043.

Thank you!

REGISTER FOR SCOUTS

A town wide Boy and Girl Scout registration will be held at the Deer Hill School Cafe' on Tuesday, Sept 12 from 6:30-8 p.m. Boy Scout Registration includes all boys interested in joining Tiger Cubs,(first grade), Cub Scouts,(second-fifth grade) and Boy Scouts(sixth grade and up.) If there are any questions, please call Jane Long for Tiger Cubs 383-1281 and Linda Farrag for Cub Scouts 383-9519.

Girls may join Daisies (kindergarten), Brownies (first-third grade), Juniors (fourth-sixth grade), Cadettes (seventh-ninth grade) and Seniors (tenth-twelfth grade).

Registration fee for Girl Scouts is $7 and a parents signature is required on all forms. Adults are needed to lead troops, especially at the Junior fourth-grade level. Any parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles or former Scout leaders, who might be interested in becoming a leader or have any questions, please call Terry James, (evenings 383-9173). The Cohasset Service Unit is also looking for positions to be filled on its Service Team. These positions include a Family Partnership chairman and a Girl Scout coordinator. If you are interested in either of these positions, please contact Nancy Bartlett at the Dedham Field Office at 1-(800)637-0070.

HEADS UP!!!!

Just a little note to mark your date books for the upcoming Soccer Booster Breakfast to be held on Sunday, Oct. 1 at the Deer Hill Cafeteria. Clambake at Sandy Beach

On Saturday, Sept. 9, the George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion is sponsoring a clambake for the annual Christine Burke Scholarship Fun at Sandy Beach, Cohasset, all for the benefit of Cohasset High School students.

According to committee chairman Scott Arnold, "We've added some new twists this year. We're having a dunk-tank, and we have commitments from the chairman of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, Tom Callahan, and the chairman of the Scituate Board of Selectmen, Ralph Crossen, to go into the tank. Now there's a money maker!"

In addition, there will be three-legged races and bag races for the kids with prizes for participants.

Then there's a home-run hitting contest using whiffle balls and whiffle bats for young and old.

Volleyball is available for the willing and uninjured from teens to creepers. To honor the ancient and honorable there will be a horseshoe contest for the old guys who can't do anything else.

Finally, there will be the main event, a full clambake put on by the famed Marshfield slugger, Dan Anderson, all accompanied by great Irish music featuring the Irish Volunteers and some great raffles with DJ Jay Fiori acting as master of ceremonies.

The raffles feature nearly 100 donated prizes from local merchants in Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham including 32-inch, 27-inch, and 20-inch Panasonic television sets.

Tickets are $30 each. More than 200 have been sold and the maximum is 400. For tickets call Neil J. Murphy at 383-6773 or Scott Arnold at 545-1896.

New minister takes the helm at First Parish Church

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"I enjoy listening to stories, even more than I do telling them," said the Rev. Jennifer Justice, the new minister at First Parish Church in Cohasset, and a master storyteller. "By being a storyteller, you know how to listen to people's stories."

And Justice has a lot of stories awaiting her. She is taking on a parish that lost not one, but two ministers in the past five years. In 1995, long-time minister, the Rev. Ed Atkinson died suddenly of a heart attack. His replacement, the Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox, was at the church slightly more than 18 months before she succumbed to cancer.

"Many communities could fall apart over something like that, become despondent, or maybe could split," said Justice. "They did the opposite. I was tremendously moved at how the congregation came together and grew stronger out of the difficulty, and behaved to each other with such compassion."

Justice officially began at First Parish, a Unitarian Universalist Association church, on Sept. 1, but won't perform her first service as minister until Sept. 10 – though she did perform services twice earlier this year as part of the interview process.

She heard about the job through the U.U.A.'s Beacon Hill office. Justice had overseen a parish in York, Penn., with the understanding that she would be looking to come back to the New England area down the road. A small hint of a southern twang reveals the fact she isn't a native New Englander — she was born and lived in North Carolina until 1979 when she moved north to persue her master's degree in theatre directing from Boston University. "I'm bicultural," she explained. "New England is my home, but all of my family is in North Carolina.

"I smile too much for the north, but I'm too direct for the south," she joked.

She realized her calling for the ministry somewhat recently. After a number of years working as a storyteller with children, and putting on storytelling concerts, she enrolled in Harvard University Divinity School in 1991, and graduated in 1994.

> "They were so honest about what their needs are, what they wanted to have happen, what they didn't, and I got to be honest with them."
> — The Rev. Jennifer Justice

Justice called First Parish's search and interview process the "best" she had ever been through. "I promise you I met every member of the congregation," she said. "They were so honest about what their needs are, what they wanted to have happen, what they didn't, and I got to be honest with them.

"They put a lot of energy into knowing me."

After a number of teas, dinners, meetings, and two services, the church's seven-member search committee voted to ask to Justice to come to the church.

The Rev. Jennifer Justice is the new minister at First Parish Church.

"She had considerable experience with a congregation our size, very strong preaching skills, very good with children and also has strong leadership skills," search committee chairman Jane Goedecke said about the decision. "The church is growing, and looking for a minister that can better organize us, and is better equipped to develop a program for ourselves and our children that can empower us...

"I think we became stronger and became self-reliant [following the death's of Atkinson and Tarbox]. We realized we are the church and we will continue," explained Goedecke, who also headed up the search that found Tarbox. Despite this thought, she said the proverbial flock looks forward to once again having a shepherd. "We hunger for a spiritual leader that will inspire us with sermons, and relieve us of the responsibility of feeling we have do it all by ourselves."

Justice jumped at the opportunity to come to First Parish, which has been a presence on Cohasset Common since 1741. "I thought right away it would be a good match for my characteristics and ministerial skills," she said.

She doesn't believe the church is in crisis, but instead is a "healthy one."

Her first ministerial position indeed a church in crisis — an AIDS ministry in Provincetown which was losing two people a month from the disease at one point. "[First Parish] has stability. Through all they been through, they've actually grown," she said.

Goedecke said the church did have its period of mourning, but said it was helped by its interim ministers, and has come out strong. She said the church congregation counts 250 people as members.

First up for the church, said Justice, will be celebrating "Celebrating with lots of joy and music, not having any crises, not being stressed is the immediate thing that needs to happen," she said. Justice also hopes the church's youth ministry will continue to grow, and wants the church's message to be communicated with the community better. "There's this thought that the Unitarian Universalist's don't stand for anything, but this congregational has such a strong vision of who we are that we need to communicate it."

Though attendance at many churches is down, Justice still believes in the need for people to have a spiritual center. "We live in a world that fragments us and breaks down the community," she said. "We need each other. We are connected and when that extended connection breaks down, we lose our center.

"That's why we need a spiritual community. It tells us what our central story is, what he believe in, and that brings us together."

The first parish building, according to John Hovorka, president of the Cohasset Historical Society and a member of First Parish, was built in 1714 by area residents tired of traveling to the Congregationalist church in Hingham. When the church's congregation outgrew the original building, a new building was built in 1747. This is the building that stands on the common today. The building was the town's original meeting place until 1825 when the church became Unitarian and the Second Congregational Church was formed.

Recently, the church celebrated the 150th birthday of the church bell.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Ten years of ADA

We've come a long way since the 1930s and '40s when President Franklin Delano Roosevelt felt compelled to hide his paralysis from the American people by never allowing himself to be photographed in a wheelchair.

This year marks the 10th anniversary of the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act, a landmark piece of federal civil rights legislation that granted long overdue equal rights and equal opportunity to people with disabilities.

The law has removed barriers in the workplace and the community which effectively barred people with all kinds of disabilities from participating fully in society — kept them from being self-sufficient and making a contribution that utilized their special talents and skills.

All that is mostly history now, thanks to the ADA.

Despite the progress of the past decade, however, there is still work to be done. The Massachusetts Office on Disability in Boston has just completed its most recent survey of 351 communities in the state. The results show that while there is greatly increased physical access to public places for the disabled, local governments are slow to recognize the needs of the hearing, speech and sight impaired.

The survey indicates that municipalities scored in the mid to high 80th percentile for providing access for the disabled to city and town halls, schools, police departments, libraries and public meeting rooms. In the remaining 10 percent of communities, there is a refusal or an inability to move meetings to accessible locations to allow people with disabilities to participate. That has to change. Strong local action helps to promote awareness that can lead to much needed change.

Lorraine Gneiff, acting director of the state's MOD, has expressed surprise at how much genuine progress has been made in the past decade to grant physical access to the disabled. Communication access, though, for those who are unable to speak, hear or see, remains a major problem.

Telecommunication devices for people who are deaf or hard of hearing are unavailable in 22 percent of town halls and public schools, in 64 percent of police stations and in 25 percent of fire stations. Access to Braille materials upon request is provided in 46 percent of communities and access to materials in large print is available in 62 percent of cities and towns.

"Communication access for those who need it is no less important than a ramp or an elevator is for those who need physical access," commented Gneiff. "In both cases, participation becomes impossible. We must do better."

Today, nearly 53 percent of communities have a local commission on disabilities as an integral part of town government, compared to 49 percent in 1995 and only 32 percent in 1988. What this means is that communities have become committed to inclusion, albeit under force of law.

Is compliance with ADA a grudging one? The ADA requires each community to appoint an ADA coordinator. So far 79 percent have done so. Cities and towns are asked to complete a self-evaluation of the access provided and 71 percent have complied with this directive. Some 52 percent of communities are engaged in a planning process to see what renovations need to be made to ensure equal access.

"Until people with disabilities can go to town meeting, participate in local government, and enter the schools and libraries paid for with their taxes, full and equal participation will remain elusive," said Gneiff.

Politics (not) as usual

There's nothing usual about the politics espoused by Polly Logan of Hingham and Cohasset.

(We award Polly the two-town affiliation because she and her family sandwiched about eight years on Main Street in Hingham between their two residences in Cohasset. So we think those in both towns can claim the transplanted Iowan as their own.)

Although Polly, a woman with a sharp intellect matched only by her wit, is true to her Republican roots — she has a wonderful bipartisan quality that appeals to those on both sides of the political aisle.

And nowhere will that be more evident than Monday when former Lt. Governor Evelyn Murphy and former state Sen. Patricia McGovern — two leading women in the Massachusetts Democratic Party — will join hundreds of others in a tribute to Polly Logan at Boston's Fairmont Copley Plaza.

The event represents the birth of The Polly Logan Fund, an endowment in support of the Center for Women in Politics and Public Policy at the University of Massachusetts Boston.

The fund will help make it possible for more women to enter the political and public policy arena, something that Polly sees as essential to the future of our country.

In an interview this week, Polly said she thinks women represent hope for the future of politics.

"I hope women will go to this school and get fired up and come out on the issues," she says about the center.

New gym floor

TO THE EDITOR:

The South Shore Community Center opens its fall season of classes and activities to a sparkling gymnasium boasting a gorgeous and shining refurbished floor. We would like to acknowledge the generosity of the many members, patrons, and friends who have donated toward this project, and others, over the past several years. We invite everyone to drop in to the center anytime and see how great we are looking.

Thanks to all of you who have generously given towards the completion of this goal and to our many other fund-raising activities. As a privately funded, non-profit organization, The South Shore Community Center relies on our community of friends and members for financial support.

We thank you all.

Viable commission

Cohasset Board of Selectmen

It was a surprise to learn in the Cohasset Mariner (Aug. 14) that the Commission on Disabilities has been disbanded and that I was the one who did the disbanding. In reality, a few members of the commission have been working hard for a number of years to fulfill our role, but we have been unable to continue in an official status because we do not have the minimum of five members. Three of us (Taffy Nothnagle, Linda Ingram, and I) have met regularly, putting together information sessions and events we believed would interest people in the community. We have advertised continuously for more members and phoned people we hoped would be interested in serving, but the response has been discouraging. We have tried to be a more proactive committee, as many local commissions in the state are, but were hindered by lack of interest.

There are many roles the commission can fill. Physical handicapped accessibility is only one need. Fortunately, Bob Egan, the town building inspector and unofficial member of our committee, is the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) coordinator for Cohasset; and he is well trained in the requirements. Some of the other functions of the Commission include advocacy, education, and response to community needs as they arise. The Massachusetts Commission on Disabilities continues to be an excellent resource for training, projects and support for all local commissions and individuals.

The work of the Commission on Disabilities is a valuable asset to the community. I am pleased to know that Lance Norris is interested in participating and hopeful that he will be able to create a viable Commission in Cohasset.

Frances F. Andrews
Cohasset

Editor's note: Mr. Andrews provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter.

Roy's boat

TO THE EDITOR:

Peter Roy's large boat (75 feet) that is too large for Cohasset Harbor has made it impossible to assign eight new moorings near the Cohasset Yacht Club. As eight people continue to wait for a mooring, Peter Roy asks that more moorings be moved to accommodate his boat, that is too large for Cohasset Harbor.

Peter Roy at a Harbor Committee meeting agreed to keep his boat max at 45 feet.

South Shore not represented on runway panel

LOCAL VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

The South Shore & Proposed Runway 14/32 Massport proposes to build a new runway at Logan Airport that points southeast right at the South Shore towns. Its name, 14/32, describes its orientation: 140 degrees of compass heading in one direction, 320 degrees in the other. The February 1999 Draft Environmental Impact Statement shows the stream of departing traffic covering the south across Quincy, Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

The arrivals are shown as more concentrated, aimed directly across Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, but Weymouth and Quincy may also be heavily affected. Massport's documentation is too vague to be sure where all impacts may fall. Private conversations with aviation planners seem to indicate that Quincy, Weymouth, and Western Hingham may host a new arrival stream.

Arrivals fly very low in altitude many miles out from the airport. According to the FAA, approaches to Logan use a 3 per cent glide slope. Current arrivals to Runway 33, which are routed over Turkey Hill and Worlds End, are often below 2,500 feet near and over rooftops in Worlds End and Crow Point. They descend below 1,500 feet over homes in Hull.

If 14/32 were ever built, jet arrivals over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset would increase to 98,000 from 29,000, according to Massport. But since the deregulation of airlines, there is no legal upward limit. Logan's published goal is to host 120 operations an hour, two flights every minute.

If 14/32 were ever built, jet arrivals over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset would increase to 98,000 from 29,000, according to Massport.

Supporters of 14/32 say the goal is not to increase overall traffic but to decrease delays by 20 percent. Massport's own figures show that in only a few years that projected 20 percent decrease would be wiped out, and delays will continue to rise, whether 14/32 is built or not. The South Shore would get a huge and hugely disproportionate load of noise and other environmental impacts if the runway were built.

There is widespread opposition to the proposed runway by communities, elected officials and transportation experts. Jane Garvey, Administrator of the FAA, asked supporters and opponents to look for alternatives. The "Garvey Panel," appointed by Mayor Menino of Boston and Governor Celucci is meeting right now, but no South Shore delegates were appointed. The future of the South Shore is being determined in Boston, and neither we nor our elected officials are at the table.

This is the first in a series of opinion pieces about the impacts of jet noise on the South Shore. For a list of elected officials against and for 14/32, see the Website of Communities Against Runway Expansion, http://www.stop1432.com/. To ask Jane Garvey for South Shore representation on her panel, write to Ms. Jane Garvey, AOA Administrator/ Federal Aviation Administration/ 800 Independence Ave. SW/ Washington, D. C. 20591 or to jane.garvey@faa.gov.

Mary Ann Frye is a member of the Hingham Jet Noise Task Force.

Video contest winners

An award night was held on Aug. 25 at the Duxbury Free Library for the participants in the first South Shore Libraries Young Adult Video Contest 2000. An "Oscar" was awarded to all entries from four participating libraries.

Cohasset's Paul Pratt Memorial Library had three entries. Alex Schwantner's "Mr. Jynx" received Best Claymation. Mike Devlin and his crew of friends, Matt Fithian, Patrick Bertovich, Aaron Bigley, Sam Cusack, and Justin Wood received Best Editing for "Stranded." The award for Best Picture went to Erik Belz for "David's Road."

Clips were shown from all videos and "David's Road" was shown in its entirety. Refreshments were served and Adelphia, one of the sponsors, handed out T-shirts to all award winners.

The Cohasset videos and clips from the award night will be aired on MediaOne cable at a future date. The video contest will be offered again next year.

Fall Story Hour

Registration for the preschool story hour at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will be accepted beginning Tuesday, Sept. 12. Story hours will be held on Thursday afternoons at 1 p.m. on Oct. 5, 12, 19 and 26 and Nov. 2 and 9. Another session will be held on Friday mornings at 10 a.m. on Oct. 6, 13, 20, and 27 and Nov. 3 and 10.

Each 45-minute program consists of several picture book stories and a simple craft project. Children must be at least 3-1/2 years old to register.

For more information, call Suzanne Terry, children's librarian at 383-1348.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Bradley, Holden debate tonight

Democratic candidates for state representative Garrett Bradley and Michael Holden will square off in a debate at 7 p.m. tonight at the Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island. The event is open to the public. The debate will be televised on Cohasset's local cable access channel at 5 p.m., Monday, Sept. 11; 9 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 14 and at 5 p.m., Monday, Sept. 18.

Bradley and Holden seek their party's nomination in the Sept. 19 primary to run against Republican Mary Anne McKenna to represent the Third Plymouth District, consisting of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, is not seeking reelection.

The candidates will tackle questions posed by a panel made up of Mary Ford, Cohasset Mariner editor; Wigmore Pierson, former cable-TV talk-show host and WATD news director Aaron Katersky. Part of the debate will be devoted to questions from the audience.

Cantwell web site

Seventeen-year old Evan Cutler of Highland Avenue is lending his Internet skills to the campaign of Jim Cantwell, a Democrat running for State Senate.

Evan is a student at St. Marks School. This summer he has been volunteering on the Cantwell Campaign. Recently, Evan completed an overhaul of the campaign website — www.jimcantwell.com. The Cantwell website includes a biography of Cantwell, a list of upcoming events, recent press releases, an online volunteer sign up page, and links to towns in the Plymouth-Norfolk senate district where residents can find the contact information for town coordinators and about upcoming campaign activities. The Cohasset link features pictures of Cantwell with three selectmen who have endorsed his candidacy: Tom Callahan, Fred Koed, and Ronnie McMorris. It also has a link to www.cohassetma.com, the town's official website.

Cutler's interest in community service, politics, and computers has fueled his participation in the campaign. "It's been great working with Jim," said Cutler. "He has been focused on making this campaign a learning experience for the students involved." Cutler, entering his junior year at St. Marks, is also on the soccer team and lacrosse team. To learn more about the Cantwell Campaign or to volunteer to help, please contact: Fred Koed (383-6640) or Margy Charles (383-0916).

In other news, Clean Water Action, an environmental group, endorsed Cantwell in a press conference at 2 p.m. today in Scituate.

Garrett Bradley

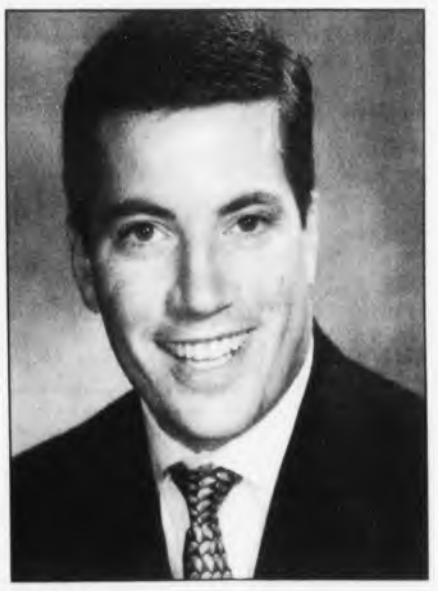
Bradley platform

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current Democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley released his platform today of legislative priorities on issues affecting senior citizens. His agenda includes a strong focus on affordable health care and lower prescription drug costs for seniors, fraud prevention, lower property taxes and water rates, and home heating assistance for seniors on fixed incomes.

As State Representative, Bradley will fight to repair our health care system so that affordable health care is available to all, prescription drug costs are lowered, and a Patients' Bill of Rights is implemented. Bradley has explored viable health care options, such as the Heinz HOPE Plan, which provides affordable health care coverage for all seniors, and on-line prescription drug services that will help remedy the rising costs of necessary prescriptions for seniors.

"As State Representative, I will support legislation which enacts a state-wide bulk prescription purchasing program to ease the burden of costs on seniors," stated Bradley. The State has a variety of programs that begin to address the prescription drug cost problem, but Bradley supports the HOPE model because it brings these programs together in order to keep costs down, provide better service, and cover more Massachusetts residents.

As an Assistant District Attorney, Bradley fought to protect seniors by using public forums to provide information to seniors on how to detect telemarketing fraud. As State Representative, Bradley will work to tighten and enforce legislation that penalizes those companies and individuals who take advantage of and deceive our senior residents.



Mike Holden

MTA praises Mike Holden

The Massachusetts Teachers Association, which has endorsed Mike Holden for State Representative, recently mailed materials to members throughout the district outlining Holden's stance on education. The pamphlet describes Holden as a "strong support of state funding to reduce class sizes, particularly in kindergarten through third grade." Holden's stance on access to full day kindergarten, enhanced early childhood education and affordable higher education is also outlined in the piece.

"The towns in this district cannot provide smaller classes, offer full day kindergarten or attract the best and brightest new teachers without more help from the State House," Holden said. "The people in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset are committed to improving their schools and the quality of education, but you can only stretch residential real estate tax dollars so far. We need a true commitment from the state to improve the quality of education in our public schools. That has to begin with reducing class sizes. It also means providing those whose job it is to educate our children with compensation and benefits that better reflect the tremendous importance of their work."

Holden says those benefits should include having a seasoned teacher available to mentor newer teachers. "Educators are very supportive of the concept because it provides a positive method of improving teacher performance. Mentors are also seen as a benefit that will help schools retain promising young teachers, which becomes problem in an economy like this," Holden explained.

Mary Anne McKenna

The curious workings of government

The actions of those that govern us grow curiouser and curiouser.

Take the case of Mrs. Rebecca Corneau, for instance.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Rebecca is a member of a far-out Christian cult that apparently has no name but whose members believe devoutly that God will provide for them whether they lift a finger or not.

She is also eight and a half months pregnant.

The problem confronting those who worry about such things in Bristol County is that Rebecca once had another child named Jeremiah who can't be found and she ain't telling what happened to him.

Jeremiah is rumored to have died by starvation when the Lord didn't come through with as many vittles as hoped and he is thought to be buried in Maine but no one is sure because they can't find the body.

Right now, Rebecca is in state custody, tucked away in a safe house in Roxbury, a medical facility that cares for pregnant women who are serving jail terms, to make sure that nothing untoward happens to her baby.

"A life was at stake, and maybe in some small way, we helped to save a life this morning," said Bristol DA Paul Walsh after Juvenile Court Judge Kenneth Nasif had put Rebecca away in the home.

This is not the first time that the governments of our state and country have faced a legal quandary of their own making.

The question before the house is this: What happens if Rebecca asks to have an abortion, or "demands" to have an abortion, as the Right-to-Lifers like to put it?

For the past 27 years, ever since Roe defeated Wade in the Supreme Court, it has been the right of any woman to have an abortion, any place, any time, and it's really none of the DA's, or any other official's, business.

What's the next move?

This is not the first time that the governments of our state and country have faced a legal quandary of their own making.

For the past 37 years, ever since Abington Township defeated Schempp (whoever he is), it has been illegal for the government to sponsor prayer in the public schools, a ban that has grown to include any religious act in any publicly owned facility.

It has even been extended in some places to include reindeer as proscribed religious symbols at Christmas — excuse me, winter solstice time — and bunny rabbits at Easter — excuse me again, spring solstice time.

Yet I hold in my hand a nickel, minted by the U. S. government in the year 1999, that assures one and all, in bold letters, "In God We Trust."

Which is it, fellas?

For the past 30 years, every time we bought a pack of Camels or the ladies opened a package of Virginia Slims we are reminded by a government-ordered label, that "The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

Yet, as far as I know, every year the Congress of the United States, in one guise or another, appropriates taxpayers' money to support the farmers who grow tobacco while another department of the same government tries to discourages the use of it.

Like I say, the actions of those that govern us grow curiouser and curiouser.

Blood drive Sept.13

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Sept. 13. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer streets from 2 - 7 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3 - 5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset. According to Cathy Pray, Director, "Only five out of every 100 people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year. First time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate. "The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," said Pray. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 800-448-3543.

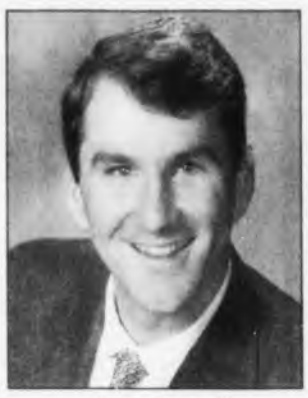
Cantwell-LeClair face-off for Democratic nomination

Two candidates are battling it out for the Democratic nomination for state senator in the Plymouth and Norfolk District in the Sept. 19 primary. They are James Cantwell and Ted LeClair.

Winner will face off against Republican Senator Robert Hedlund in the general election Nov. 7.

Hedlund is unopposed and has no opposition in the primary.

Here are profiles of the two candidates. Voters can get an in-depth view of the two men in a debate at the Winslow House on Careswell Street in Marshfield Monday, Sept. 11 at 7 p.m. moderated by the League of Women Voters and sponsored by Community Newspaper Company.



James Cantwell

Ted LeClair

James Cantwell

Age: 33

Occupation: Environmental attorney

Residence: 80 Huntington Avenue, South Weymouth, MA 02190

Family: Wife, Jennifer; son, Christopher

Political Involvement:

a. Democratic State Committee member elected to represent the Plymouth and Norfolk state Senate district (1994-present)

b. Aide to Congressman William Delahunt (1998-1999)

c. Massachusetts state Senate Legislative aide (1988-1991, 1993-1995)

d. Elected member, Weymouth Democratic Town Committee

e. Former chairman, Marshfield Democratic Town Committee

a. Assistant District Attorney, Norfolk County (1995-1998)

b. Marshfield Selectman (1996-1999)

c. Easter Seal Society of Massachusetts, House of Delegates (1988-present) (Volunteer coordinator of annual Easter Seal Marathon Softball Fundraiser, 1994-present)

d. President and co-founder, The Daniel Webster Preservation Trust (1990 - present)

e. Vice-president and co-founder, The Back River Watershed Association (1999-2000)

f. Past chair, Hugh O'Brian Youth Leadership Foundation, Alumni Association

g) Jordan Hospital Advisory Board Member

h) Marshfield Conservation Commissioner (1994-1996)

The Three Top Issues Facing the South Shore:

1. Protecting the character of our communities:

Our region is truly at risk. We are experiencing growth and change at a phenomenal pace that threatens to overwhelm our communities with gridlock — and which jeopardizes our open spaces, water quality, and historical districts.

I have a record of fighting to protect the quality of life of our region, whether it be working to defeat the Clean Harbors incinerator in Weymouth, founding the Back River Watershed Association, battling to prevent contamination of Duxbury Bay, and preserving the historic Webster Estate in Marshfield. We need a state senator who will be a partner with local officials to provide needed resources and experience to protect our region's quality of life. I am pleased to report that I have begun this process by building a partnership with 25 selectmen, town councilors, and former selectmen from throughout our district who have endorsed my candidacy.

2. Education:

A strong public education system is the economic engine for the commonwealth. However, the future of education reform as we have come to know it is currently in jeopardy — and will be decided by the next legislative assembly that meets in January of 2001. As the son of a life-long teacher, I have a deep understanding of the needs of our public education system — and can personally attest to the significant advances that communities have been able to make in education services as a result of the seven-year partnership that the Education Reform Act of 1994 created. I can also speak from the experience of having been a selectman and chief financial officer for a municipality that such educational improvement is due both to the dedication of teaching professionals in the schools — but also largely due to the financial support that the commonwealth has provided. As a state senator, I would fight to continue this educational covenant.

3. Health Care:

Congress cut almost $50 billion from Medicare in 1997, cuts that have directly resulted in the crisis in health care that affects each family in the commonwealth. As a Congressional aide to U.S. Rep. Bill Delahunt, I worked to expose the high cost of pharmaceutical drugs for senior citizens, fought to maintain home health services and battled with insurance companies to provide life-sustaining treatment for South Shore residents. As your state senator I will strive to help make affordable, accessible, and quality health care the norm for every resident of the Commonwealth.

Ted LeClair

Residence: 165 E[illegible] Street, Marshfield

Marital Status: Single

Age: 31

Occupation: Small businessman/cranberry grower

Founder, LeClair Brothers Cranberry Co.

Part owner, Webster Cranberry Co.

Military Service: United States Navy Lieutenant, 1991-1994

Education: Villanova University, BA, 1991; Harvard University, School of Extension, Graduate candidate

Party Affiliation: Democrat

Office Seeking: Plymouth-Norfolk State Senate seat

Political Involvement: Co-chairman, American Legion Massachusetts Boys' State Program; assoc. member, Marshfield Democratic Town Committee

Civic Involvement: Member, St. Luke's Church, Scituate; member, American Legion; member, South Shore Chamber of Commerce; board of directors, Cape Cod Cranberry Growers Association

1. Education:

As I walk the neighborhoods of this district, people tell me the education of their children is a priority without parallel.

With the passage of the Education Reform Act, this state took a leap forward in its quest to make the public schools in Massachusetts the best in the nation. It is critical that we continue the commitment we made in 1993 to improve our public education system; by hiring the most qualified teachers and supporting them with decent wages and benefits, by upgrading the curriculum within our classrooms, and by maintaining our schools so they will serve our students well into the new millennium.

Recently, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan warned the nation's governors not to sacrifice our public schools for the sake of politically motivated tax cuts. Nothing is more important to our future success in the global economy than to invest our resources in a vibrant public school system.

As I listen to the voters of this senate district, I am further convinced there is no higher priority than to endow our children with the best education. We can afford no less.

2. Health Care

It is inexcusable that as we approach the new millennium, hundreds of families in this district are without basic health insurance coverage. They are not the poorest among us; these are working families — in many cases, small businessmen — who are forced to choose between paying the mortgage or paying exorbitant health insurance premiums.

It is reprehensible that families in [illegible] of the most affluent districts in the state — from Weymouth to Duxbury — are faced with a health-care system that remains beyond their financial grasp.

Our elderly citizens are [illegible]urdened with skyrocketing prescription costs beyond their coverage or ability to pay. That retired citizens must choose between food and medication when their monthly fixed income runs out is nothing less than a national disgrace.

It is time we take health-care decisions away from the insurance executives and return it to the health professionals and their patients.

A cornerstone of this campaign has been my pledge to bring true reform to an industry sorely in need of a remedy.

3. Taxes

One major issue that has divided the South Shore communities is the steady rise in property taxes. This is of particular concern to the elderly. For so many years through their efforts and their hard-earned dollars we have built this state's highways and bridges, we have constructed state- of-the-art schools. Now it is our time to protect our elderly from the soaring taxes that threaten to banish them from the communities they have supported for so long. They are the backbone of our towns.

Our state ranks near the bottom in the northeast in terms of local school aid. As a result of this, towns have been ripped apart by the issue of school construction, often dividing elderly and young families. The continued improvement of our public education system must not be made on the backs of our elderly. We need to strike a balance where the state is committed to a fairer share so towns are not faced with the repeated burden of Proposition 21 /2 overrides.

Cantwell, LeClair debate

"Even though the debate will be in Marshfield, development of the naval air station seems to be one of the many issues I believe I have been clear on my position throughout the campaign. I'm against the mall. Currently it seems to have gone back and forth on the issue over time," LeClair said.

LeClair is clear on what he hopes the result of the debate will be.

"I hope in the end people come away with the belief their vote will matter. I hope people will come away wanting to put someone in office who has served his country. Both of us have a lot of experience just different kinds of experience," LeClair said.

"The most important thing I want people to know is that these two matters. I really need their vote and it will matter in the election. I have been door knocking on nearly 5,000 homes. I really have done it. These 5,000 visits may not be a lot in such a large district, but the point is I have gone out and done a grassroots effort, rather than relying on a long list of endorsements," LeClair said.

With voter turnout for the primary election projected to be a scant 12 percent to 13 percent, Cantwell also sees the debate as a crucial way for citizens to become informed on the issues.

"It's so important for us to let voters know who we are and what our positions are. In a debate, people can best understand the critical issues facing the South Shore and the experience I bring to address these issues, without responses reduced to a sound bite," Cantwell said.

Cantwell sees experience as a dividing issue.

"Our positions are very close. The one issue is the difference in our experience. The difference is the 15 years of active participation in public service that I would bring to the Statehouse to help South Shore residents," Cantwell said.

"A priority for me is protecting the quality of life in our communities and how I would address this if elected. Education, growth issues, and the future of health care, these are three issues I expect to be important in the debate," Cantwell, who advocates a patients' bill of rights, said.

Cantwell sees the Winslow House as a very appropriate setting for the debate.

"This is the location where Daniel Webster's law office was located. Daniel Webster was a U.S. Senator and secretary of state for three different presidents," Cantwell, president and co-founder of the decade-old Daniel Webster Preservation Trust, said.

"Right now, we are having tremendous growth pressures from the naval air station development, the general development of towns, the advent of Greenbush, and the potential expansion of Logan Airport. Having the debate at the Winslow House is symbolic of the need to protect the heritage of our communities. I feel passionate about protecting the future of the South Shore, and this is one of the reasons I am running for office," Cantwell said.

"What I hope for the outcome of the debate is that people will feel this was an example of how our government and public discourse should be handled, to have two people intelligently discuss the issues and respectfully discuss the differences they have in a modern day Lincoln and Douglas format," Cantwell said. "I want people to come away saying that these two people were very respectful of one another with absolutely no negativity, that the discussion was between intelligent and well-intentioned candidates without mudslinging."

Cantwell hopes the voters will take the opportunity to participate in the campaign discussion in one of the several ways available, from the Winslow House debate to town-hall chat rooms.

"This is the first time there has been a forum of this nature, where people can interact by computer, attend the debate, watch on cable, hear the debate on the radio, and read about the debate before and after," Cantwell said. "I'm excited about the opportunity for voters to participate."

Cohasset native accepted into NASA astronaut program finalist in 1982, and also participated in the track and cross-country programs. His academic and athletic performances helped him receive an appointment to Annapolis, from which he graduated in 1986. He moved through the ranks before becoming most-recently an executive officer with the USS Virginia, a decommissioned cruiser out of Groton, Conn.

This opportunity is fitting for someone who grew up surrounded by news of Apollo missions and moon landings. Like every little kid whose imagination was fueled by the early space program, Bowen grew up with the desire to become an astronaut. "I watched all the Apollo flights, Skylab, the early shuttle missions," said the 38-year old Bowen. "I watched Neil Armstrong walk on the moon at the age of five."

His interest got him to respond to a Navy call for applicants for the space program. "Every two years, the Navy puts out a message asking for applicants [to the program]. I saw it and applied and the Navy basically sent out 250 names to NASA," he explained. According to Bowen, NASA received 2,500 applications, interviewed 120, and finally selected 17, with Bowen being one of them.

For the next five weeks Bowen will learn to fly a Navy T34 training jet in Pensacola, Fla. He said the only experience he has as a pilot is at the helm of a submarine, and is "really looking forward" to it. That will be followed by lessons in flying a T38 — a two-engine two-seat jet owned by NASA — and then months of learning about the space shuttle and its systems.

All 17 candidates, said Bowen, if they complete the training program, will be eligible to be named to a mission crew. He said it will be at least two years before his name is considered, and a more likely timeframe, though he doesn't want to even speculate, would be a seat on the shuttle in five years.

"There's a lot of technical work you have to do in addition to supporting other missions," said Bowen who will be joining the program as a mission specialist. "Hopefully I'll just be contributing to the program...My job will be specified somewhere down the road."

Along with his electrical engineering degree from the Naval Academy, he earned a master's in ocean engineering from MIT, and went through the Navy's nuclear power program, all of which Bowen thinks played a part in becoming one of the coveted astronaut class of 2000. "A very broad engineering background helps," he said.

Though he now lives in Yorktown, Va., with his wife, Debra, and his three kids, Nicholas, 8, Jillian, 7, and Max, 4, he says he still has family and friends on the South Shore. His sister, Patricia Fontaine, lives in the Juniper Rise house he grew up in, and his parents live in Hanover.

"He's an extremely intelligent person and always had high aspirations, and he does it in quiet manner," said Fontaine. "The whole family is very proud of him. He has always excelled beyond anybody else. He's just done so much.

"We're all very proud of him."

Bowen looks at the chance to break the bonds of gravity not only to fulfill a childhood dream, but to help out the field of science — though he admits it sounds a bit trite.

"It looks like a great opportunity to do great things," he said adding he looks forward to "anything I can do to contribute that benefits mankind."

Stephen Bowen stands in mission control at the Houston space center.

A tribute to South Shore's first lady of politics have moved through the pipeline into political office or in roles that shape public policy," says Sherman, who explains the goal of the center is to expand that circle of women.

The Polly Logan Fund will help provide mentoring programs, attract officials, activists and scholars to give public lectures and involve students in scholarly projects, and conduct and disseminate innovative and timely research on public policy issues affecting women.

The idea for The Polly Logan Fund took root about a year ago when Sherman got together with several of Logan's friends that were interested in establishing an endowment in her name. Sherman welcomed the idea and thought Logan was the perfect role model.

"Her brand of politics is so inclusive, so joyful, so inspiring," says Sherman, who says Logan is a refreshing voice in what she describes as "an age of cynicism." "Polly is a an absolutely bright beacon leading the way."

Though liberal on issues such as abortion, Logan is true to her Republican roots and is a hard campaigner for candidates in her party whether running for state representative or US Congress.

"I wish all (Republicans) were with me on the issues," Logan says. "But I'm realistic and know in politics you have to learn the art of compromise which makes the best kind of leadership."

Growing up in Red Oak, Iowa – a small town a good five hours from Chicago, Logan recalls her mother getting involved in politics at the grassroots level. Logan, who lives on Nichols Road in Cohasset, attributes her Midwestern upbringing with instilling the importance of education.

Logan attended the University of Nebraska and George Washington University where she edited the college paper. She met her future husband, Edward Logan, whom she married in 1949, on a trip to Massachusetts to visit her sister. Logan may have acquired her ability to win folks over on both sides of the political aisle through her relationship with the Logans, who were Democrats.

Logan and her husband moved to the family estate in Cohasset after their son Malcolm was born. Their daughter Martha soon followed. Not long thereafter, Logan got involved with her first campaign and hasn't looked back since.

Soon she was elected to the state Republican committee, a post she still holds. And she was recently elected as an "elector" and will cast one of the state's electoral votes for Texas Gov. George W. Bush, should he win the state, although she concedes a Bush victory in heavily Democratic Massachusetts is unlikely.

GOP state committee vice chairman Polly Logan chats with Dick Harris and Sarah Bush at the annual Republican Town Committee cookout at the Guilds' home on Jerusalem Road.

"I've had a Bush bumper sticker on my car for two years," Logan says with a laugh.

While politics and campaigning are her passion, Logan has put her considerable energy into innumerable causes and projects over the years.

An avid environmentalist, she won the New England Award from the Environmental Protection Agency; is a founder of the Doric Dames State House guides and the Ladies Committee of the US Constitution and served as an overseer of the Museum of Fine Arts and as vice president of the Federation of Garden Clubs in the state – to name just a few.

Back in the 1980s during the savings and loan debacle, Logan went with a group sponsored by the US State Department to El Salvador to oversee that country's election. While there she spoke to a group of women that the US had loaned money to buy sewing machines and cloth. With their profits they could loan money to other women to start businesses.

"I told them how resourceful they were and if they were running our banking, we wouldn't be having problems," Logan recalls with a laugh. "It showed me that a small investment can pay such dividends."

Logan, who has battled cancer for the past three years with strength and optimism, is pleased The Polly Logan Fund will invest in women.

"Many people won't go into politics now, women are our real hope," Logan said. "I hope women will go to this school and get fired up and come out on the issues."

Another long-time friend Martha Bewick of Hingham, met Logan years ago when Bewick ran for state representative from Cambridge. Bewick says Logan is an inspiration.

"She loves what she does and I hope others are inspired by her example," Bewick says. "Polly brings humor and perspective to everything in life."

Emcees for Monday's event that takes place from noon to 2 p.m. are Marjorie Arons-Barron of Channel 5's "Five on Five" program and The Honorable Mickey Edwards, former Republican US congressman from Oklahoma.

Greenbush powwow with governor slated

said it was not going to be participating in any mitigation discussions at that time. "The towns are quite concerned and apprehensive continuing with the negotiations and whether the MBTA will deal with the Towns in good faith," the letter said. "Cohasset and Scituate are convinced that the only way these negotiations can continue is if a meeting takes place directly with Governor Cellucci."

Hedlund, who was at the Cohasset selectmen's meeting the night the letter was signed, surprised both boards by saying he had already requested a meeting with governor for the towns, and was just waiting for Cellucci to return from vacation to establish a meeting date.

With the date set, Callahan is now concerned that Cohasset's and Scituate's concerns will be swallowed up by more talk of tunnels by their bigger neighbors to the west. "We had not asked for a meeting in conjunction with them. Cohasset and Scituate asked for one because we have particular issues," he said. "My only concern is I'm sure we're going to have a limited conversation [with the Governor] and we don't want to lose valuable time...What I'm reading in the newspapers on Weymouth and Braintree is that people have some relatively new concerns. Now there's talk about putting a tunnel in Weymouth Landing. I don't want the meeting to get sidetracked."

Thomas Gruber, Cohasset's mitigation committee chairman, was surprised to hear of Weymouth and Braintree's inclusion and said he had no reaction at this point.

Hedlund, who represents Weymouth and parts of Braintree as well as Cohasset and Scituate, said he invited all four towns because of the towns' shared concerns. "I had been working on setting up a meeting with the governor anyway when I got the requests from Cohasset and Scituate. Some of the issues they had been dealing with in Weymouth and Braintree are similar and since I do represent those towns, I thought it appropriate to include them," said Hedlund.

Callahan said Cohasset hopes to express to Cellucci its concerns with the restoration process, and what town officials perceive as a lack of good faith in negotiating on the MBTA's part, with the town. "We want some assurances there will be some good faith negotiations and our concerns will receive more than just lip service," Callahan elaborated. "We need to make sure our many mitigation issues are addressed."

"We're looking forward to the opportunity to sit down and discuss our concerns with the governor regarding Greenbush," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "I'm hoping we are dealt with in a fair and even-handed manner."

Though Haddad also hoped the meeting would be between Cohasset and Scituate, he still saw it as a great opportunity for the town. "I was hoping the meeting would have been with Scituate and Cohasset only because we share similar concerns, we're small towns, we're at the end of the line, we've never dealt with a train before...Any opportunity to deal directly with the governor we'll accept," he said.

Scituate selectman Richard Lane said he actually was pleased Weymouth and Braintree would be included. "If there is a ground swell in Braintree and Weymouth, we definitely should team up," he said.

Lane added that he is just happy to have the opportunity to meet face-to-face with the governor, saying, "we may never get this chance again."

Some of the issues the towns have are largely environmental, such as a possible flood-plain problem along the Cohasset stretch of tracks, and some concerns about grade crossings in town. Scituate's concerns include infrastructure in North Scituate and the placement of the rail's layover station in the Greenbush section of town, Callahan said. He also said, as far as he could tell, Braintree and Weymouth mostly had infrastructure and traffic concerns. A "cut and cover" tunnel underneath Quincy Avenue was proposed by Hedlund during a recent tour of the proposed Weymouth Landing station site by Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan.

Scituate reporter Liz Lawrence contributed to this story.

Hopes abound heading into opener

Rolfe sees plenty of reasons for optimism on the gridiron

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset opens a season of high hopes at home Friday night against Archbishop Williams.

The Skippers finished 3-6-1 in 1999, but third year head coach Tony Rolfe has every reason to believe 2000 holds bigger and better things for his team.

"This will be the first year where I honestly feel like we're building on something," Rolfe asserts "In the first year, our main focus was putting our system in, and then last year we were hit hard by graduations. This year we have a lot of returning starters, and I'd be surprised if we weren't a lot better."

The coach is more than happy to prove this contention by breaking his team down, position by position:

OFFENSE

Quarterback

If football coaches could be polled on which position player they'd prefer to see return more than any other, the runaway winner would certainly be quarterback, arguably the single most influential position in all of team sports. The good news for Tony Rolfe starts with Jason Brown, his first ever returning QB.

The junior was used primarily as an option quarterback and running threat last year as a sophomore. With a year's worth of experience and maturity now under his belt, though, Rolfe will be looking for more opportunities to take advantage of Brown's strong arm.

"Jason is a quarterback who is well suited to our system," appraised Rolfe. "We want a quarterback with versatility and he definitely fits the bill there. He's very quick and has shown he can throw the ball when necessary. This year, we should be able to let him open it up a bit more."

Receiver

Rolfe envisions Brown teaming well with another well rounded player, receiver Nick Bolster. The junior is in his third year with the varsity squad, and the coach predicts this will be his "breakout year."

"Nick has really emerged this summer," reported the coach. "He was a good solid player for us the last two years, but it's obvious that he's worked really hard on improving. The difference is like night and day. He's getting open and catching anything thrown near him. All of the coaches agree that he's going to have a huge year for us."

"You're always better off in the long run developing and using as many players as you can. That's how you maintain continuity. Graduations and injuries are a fact of life, and I think this is the best way to deal with those issues."

Skippers head football coach Tony Rolfe

Another third year junior contributor, Liam Martin, will start opposite Bolster at the other split end spot. He too is expected by the coach to take a big step up this season.

Backfield

The loss of 1,400-yard rusher Daniel Charles, whose family moved to Randolph, can't be glossed over. However, Rolfe honestly feels he has a candidate to step into those rather enormous shoes in one of his team's captains, Bryan Krupczak.

For starters, the senior is not only one of the fastest football players in the league, but one of the fastest athletes on the South Shore, as attested to by his league championship in the 200 meter last year. However, what has the coach really excited, and, he admits, even a little surprised, is the toughness the 5'9"-175 pound back has displayed this summer.

"Bryan has been taking on tacklers extremely well," Rolfe noted. "You can really tell that he wants to do whatever it takes to be a big time player."

Speaking of surprises, Rolfe says his biggest and most pleasant one of the summer has been the emergence of sophomore Tom Anderson.

Heading into training camp, the head coach considered the competition for the starting fullback job to be wide open, but the 5'10"-185 sophomore dispelled that notion quickly. Anderson was the clear class of the field in both running and blocking assignments, said Rolfe, adding that he's got a high ceiling in terms of potential to boot.

"Tom is just a natural athlete who's going to keep getting better with every rep," asserted the coach.

Line

Most football coaches subscribe to theory that the majority of games are ultimately won at the line of scrimmage. Rolfe is one of them, which explains why he is practically giddy over the fact that he's returning 80 percent of line that was considered very solid a year ago.

Captain Craig Davis, a third year starter, anchors the line at right tackle. The 6'3"-255 pound senior clearly has the size to dominate, but Rolfe

Cohasset Sailing Club Annual Award Day

On Sunday, Aug. 27, the Cohasset Sailing Club ended its 41st summer of teaching sailing, racing and sportsmanship on Cohasset Harbor with the Annual Awards Day cookout. More than 200 children and teenagers from 10 to 15 years old participated in this year's sailing and water safety program, in addition to 28 adults who spent Saturday and Sunday mornings learning to sail in the club's fleet of Cape Cod Mercury sailboats.

On Awards Day, club members and their families enjoyed a warm sun and brisk winds as the junior sailors showed off their racing skills, piloting Turnabouts around an inside-the-harbor race course. After the traditional hot dog lunch, awards were presented to the outstanding sailors in each class from the 10-year-old Mates to the 14-year-old Sailing Masters. Perpetual trophy awards were then presented to sailors whose success and service to the club are recognized each year.

Lady Skippers kick up level of play

Soccer team shows signs of improvement for third-year coach

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

With two years under her belt as head coach of the Cohasset High girls soccer team, Deb Beal has found the toughest part of her job to be instilling her style of play in the Lady Skippers.

This was particularly true during her first year at the helm. Last year, the team did play better and now, with Beal in her third year, she can see the difference in the girls and the way they carry themselves on the playing field.

With a program that has gone through coaches at the rate Elizabeth Taylor goes through husbands, the stability Beal has brought to the soccer field has been a godsend.

"The girls are thinking more before they make a pass. They know where they're going to go with the ball when they get it."

Cohasset girls' soccer coach Jen Beal

Cohasset, as you may or may not remember, won just three games last year, despite sensational play from an overworked defense. Beal is determined not to let the responsibility of keeping the ball out of the Lady Skippers' end fall squarely on the shoulders of her defensive players this season. She wants more controlled and efficient performances from the midfielders on the transition plays, which would in turn make it easier to establish an improved offensive attack.

Beal has seen improvement from the team; not only in the 44-player turnout, but also in the patience the girls have shown on the field.

"The girls are thinking more before they make a pass," reported Beal. "They know where they're going to go with the ball when they get it."

Of the 44 players (which is "phenomenal for Cohasset," according to the coach), Beal plans to keep 20, including eight forwards, to give her a good selection to work with during a game. Overall, she is extremely pleased with the speed of her forwards. One front-liner the coach is particularly high on is freshman Gillian Weber. Small and quick to the ball, Weber is one of a truckload of hard-working underclassmen that make up the program.

"She's extremely coachable and very fast," Beal said. "I wish I had 11 of her."

Defensively, the team graduated four starters "that kept us alive." Still, Beal likes what she has seen from the defense.

"From what I'm seeing, I don't think I'll be hit that hard by (graduation)," she asserted.

Several players have stood out insists that his biggest asset is a love for the game, something he feels confident will attract a number of college scouts this season.

"Craig is just a player," he said. "He's talented, but the big thing with him is that football is his passion. He's been playing it since Pop Warner, and his enthusiasm just shines through."

Returning to reclaim their guard positions are senior Jeff Scribner (5'10"-190) and junior Will Prendergrast (6'0"-195). Junior Jari Martin (6'1"-215), Liam's brother, is back to handle the center duties.

The left tackle job appears to have been won by junior Brandon Goff, who logged some varsity time in 1999.

Craig Davis' freshman brother, Steve, has nudged his way into the varsity picture, and should add some much needed depth.

DEFENSE

Line

Craig Davis fulfills the role of dual anchor. He will team inside the five man front with returning nose tackle Pat Carbone (5'9"-160). Despite the slight frame by nose tackle standards, Rolfe professes nothing but confidence in the ability of this junior to get the job done, insisting his experience as a standout wrestler carries over to the the job of run stuffer on the gridiron.

"Pat's motor is just running all the time," testified Rolfe. "He's all over the place. It's even more amazing when you watch the game films and see that he really is in on just about every play. He's also a bull dog who knows how to use his low center of gravity to hold his ground."

Rivaling the pleasant surprise of Anderson on the offensive side of the ball for Rolfe has been the rise to prominence of senior Tom Bilodeau (6'1"-190) at defensive end.

Skippers middle linebacker Ronan Buick (#88) has a bead on this Hingham ball carrier in last week's exhibition against the Harbormen.

Said Rolfe: "He's just stepped up and seized that job."

Sophomore Kosimo Cambi (6'1"-190) and junior John Hussey (6'1-205) have earned the other two starting nods on the defensive front.

Junior Paul Previte (dubbed "Mr. Versatile by Rolfe) will provide quality depth not only here, but also at linebacker and in the offensive backfield.

Linebacker

Ronan Buick returns to the middle for his senior year. The 6'1"-190 pounder has been good enough to be the starter at linebacker each of the last two seasons. However, this season, Rolfe believes he has a chance to make a major name for himself in 2000.

"Ronan has the speed and smarts, and now he seems to have added a lot of confidence," Rolfe reports. "He's just dominated in camp. Obviously, he's playing a key position for us. If he can keep up this level of play, it's going to be a huge plus for us."

The other linebacker spot belongs to Justin Langham. The 5'6"-170 pound senior took over starting duties alongside Buick midway through last season, and Rolfe says it's no coincidence the defense showed steady improvement the rest of the way.

Sophomore Ben Lynner is the leading candidates to provide backup at both spots.

Backfield

Krupczak and Bolster are expected to lead the way in the secondary. Sophomore Chris McKenna (5'6"-150) also appears to have won a starting job with his aggressive play.

Rolfe would like to avoid the easy temptation of using his better players for most of the 48 minutes. He'd like to find a way to rest Krupczak and Bolster, and is still looking for younger players like McKenna to put a strong claim in for deep back jobs.

"You're always better off in the long run developing and using as many players as you can," offered Rolfe. "That's how you maintain continuity. Graduations and injuries are a fact of life, and I think this is the best way to deal with those issues."

SPORTS NOTES

6th Annual Sergeant First Class Harvey L. Liberman Memorial Scholarship Golf Tournament- First Lieutenant John A. Pape of Cohasset, has announced the 6th Annual Sergeant First Class Harvey L. Liberman Memorial Scholarship Golf Tournament, which benefits a memorial scholarship fund, will be held at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham at 12:30 PM on Monday September 25th.

1LT Pape is the chairman of the SFC Liberman Fund, founded several years ago, memorializing SFC Liberman, a Massachusetts Army National Guard soldier who died while on duty. SFC Liberman served many years as the supply sergeant at the Weymouth Armory.

The SFC Liberman Memorial Scholarship Fund gives an annual scholarship benefiting higher education to a member, or dependent of a member of the Massachusetts National Guard.

Memory Lane, located at 5 Columbian Street, in Braintree 02184 is the sponsor of the Golf Tournament, and will host a buffet supper and post tournament party after 18 holes of golf.

Registration forms and information sheets are available at Memory Lane, or by calling 781 843-2200.

Cost to play is $75 per player, or $300 for a foursome. Individuals are encouraged to register and will be placed into an ad hock foursome. Carts and post play party, as well as prizes are included.

Hole sponsorships are available for $100. Golf balls can be sponsored for $25 or $10. Donations can be mailed to SFC Liberman Fund C/O Memory Lane.

SIDS road race coming up

The 19th annual SIDS road race will occur in Hingham on Sunday, Sept. 17.

The 10K race and 10K walk begins at Hingham High, runs through four miles of Wompatuck State Park, and returns to the high school. The two-mile "Fun Run" begins at Hingham High, goes to the entrance of the Park and back to the school.

Both the 10K walk and Fun Run begin at 9:30 a.m., while the 10K race begins at 10:30 a.m.

Pre-registration fees are $10 for the 10K walk and Fun Run and $12 for the race. Post-registration fees are $12 for the walk and Fun Run, $15 for the race.

Awards will be given to the top three overall male and female finishers in the 10K race, walk and Fun Run. The top three young boys and girls will also be awarded in the Fun Run.

Proceeds from the race will benefit the Massachusetts Center for Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS).

For more information, contact John Orshak at (781) 837-7210 or Peter Katsoulas (978)526-7860.

Flag Football sign-up

Registration for Hingham Flag Football will be held on Sept. 9 from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. at pal Field in Hingham.

This program is the only one of its kind on the South Shore. Boys and girls, ages 5-12, from all South Shore communities are welcome to participate.

Entry fees are $50 per person with a $90 cap per family.

Pal Field is on Beal Street in Hingham behind Lincoln Plaza. Take exit off Route 3A opposite the commuter boat exit. Pal Field is at the end of the street.

For more information, please call: (781) 383-9122.

Lady Skippers kick up level of play

during preseason practice, including sweeper Yasmine Afshar and backs Julie Lordan, Carlie Carter and Maura McKenny. Beal expects Carter and McKenny to also see outside and center midfield duties during the season. Stopper Maggie O'Neil has practiced well, as has goalkeeper Kelly Holway.

Holway, in only her second year playing, is coming off a tremendous autumn from a year ago where she dominated her position on the JV team. "She played fantastic last year at the JV level," Beal said.

Of course, Beal knows she can't subject Holway to a sustained barrage of shots in every game, even if Cohasset does play Hanover, Abington and Norwell twice each this season. The girls in front of her have to make big plays and win the one-on-one battles.

"Defense has always been our key," Beal said. "I'd like to see a better transition game at midfield. We need to become a little more aggressive on balls out of the air."

The fact that Cohasset opens against perennially strong Hanover at Alumni Field on Friday doesn't give the Lady Skippers long to strengthen their vulnerabilities. Beal, of course, would rather face the Lady Indians a little ways down the line, but the schedule is the schedule and Cohasset's shows Hanover on Sept. 8.

"It's tough to open our season against Hanover," Beal said. "We want to hold them off as long as we can."

As is the case every year, the tough South Shore League schedule could work out to be a big plus for Cohasset if the Lady Skippers ultimately qualify for the Division 3 South Sectionals. They'll probably end up playing no less than three tourney-bound teams two times each during the season. That fact alone will help Cohasset in the tournament.

Home and Garden television comes to the South Shore

Lights! Camera! Action! has been a common refrain in many Hingham homes this summer as film crews from Home and Garden Television (HGTV) have been in the area filming for two of their prime time shows, "Kitchen Design" and "Bed and Bath Design." The 52-episode series will focus on New England and will start airing in October of this year. Each half-hour show features two home tours and a mini-documentary on a design topic.

The host of the shows, Joan Kohn, spent a day in July at the home of Hingham architect Sally Weston, interviewing Weston about her new kitchen and master bedroom suite. The producers also used the Weston home to film mini-documentaries and introductions to other segments for the two shows. "We had a great day", said Weston. "The crew and Joan were so nice and easy and fun to work with. It's exciting that the town and local design talent will get this kind of exposure." The shows will also feature homes from Norwell, Scituate, Cohasset and Duxbury.

Senior producer, John Rice lives in Norwell and owns Above the Line Programming. He was hired to produce the two-season series.

"This has been a wonderful opportunity to show off what is unique and special about the architecture, talent and people of New England," he said.

"We've been to the Cape and the Islands, the Berkshires, Stowe, Vermont, the Maine coast and everywhere in between. The show will feature a mix of old and new construction, historic renovations, contemporary designs, rooms done on a budget and fantasy tours — all rooms with interesting design stories."

The shows also feature interviews with local architects, designers and builders involved in the remodeling projects.

Sue Bush of Hingham was booking producer for the project. She encouraged the producers to come to Hingham.

"It's been really rewarding to bring the shows here," she said. "The crew loves coming to Hingham. The homeowners and experts are enthusiastic and great on camera, the homes are all fabulous and the town so interesting and beautiful. It's going to be a wonderful show."

Other Hingham homeowners who will appear in the series include, Kate Dickerson, Sheila Keneally, Susan Roy and Robin Pellesier of Main Street, Beth Smith of Cottage Street, Lisa Patterson of Burditt Avenue and Grace Brown of Rice Road.

The shows also feature interviews with local architects, designers and builders involved in the remodeling projects. Weston of Weston Hewittson Architects will appear with four more of her designs as well as Ben Wilcox of Wilcox Corporation; John Hallen of J.M. Hallen Associates; Peter Bargende of Faneuil Kitchens; Cameron Snyder and Gene Hester of Kitchen Concepts, Norwell; Jim Kelleher of Axiom, Norwell and Rick Lordan of Lordan Building and Remodeling, Cohasset.

Many rooms were stylized by Nanette Walsh of La Petite Maison, Hingham. She provided bed, bath and kitchen linens and accessories from her South Street shop to help homeowners with finishing touches to their rooms.

"Kitchen Design" can be seen Thursday nights at 9:30 and "Bed and Bath Design" Saturday nights at 10:30. Home and Garden Television is channel 32 on Media One and is seen in more than 60 million homes nationwide.

Production will continue through the fall. For more information or to submit homes for the project, call Above the Line Programming at (978) 369-5515.

Bridge club starts

Cohasset Elder Affairs announced today a new duplicate bridge game opening at the Community Center in Cohasset. The Owl's Nest Bridge Clubs will be sponsoring the ACBL (American Contract Bridge League) sanctioned game every Monday beginning Sept. 11 and continuing every Monday thereafter.

Bridge and its competitive partner, duplicate bridge, are the world's most popular games and indeed the very same game, only the scoring system is different. Every Monday the game will begin at 12:30 sharp. Refreshments will be served just before the game begins and the doors will open in time for coffee. Partners are available for those who don't have a partner. The scoring will be stratified thereby giving every player a chance to earn his/her master's points at every level of play.

Club director Bill Wennerberg is certified by the ACBL and currently runs very successful games in Wareham and Duxbury. Bill is also an ACBL certified bridge teacher and he will be offering lessons for all interested players and non-players on the morning of game day.

For more information about any of the games or lessons please call the bridge club at 508-746-8715.

Health fair

South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Elder Affairs, Social Services League and Cohasset Department of Health will hold a Multigenerational Recreation & Wellness Fair from 9 am to 2 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 9.

Children can hop on board an antique fire truck and see a real ambulance. Activities will include pony rides, water play, bubble making, parachute time, finger games, face painting, chess, food and gymnastics demonstrations, open bowling. Ha' Penny Theatre will perform "Mr. Bear & Co."

Adults can observe gourmet cooking demonstrations, chowder fest, yoga, blood pressure clinic, foot care, hearing, eye and osteoporosis screening, cholesterol and glucose, skin saver, oral cancer and more.

Special friends

Home will help caregivers cope

By Cory Tromblee
STAFF WRITER

Katie Hanley of South Shore ARC shares a laugh with Rose Marie Robinson from the Friendship Home.

When Joan Savarise decided to take her vacation to California last year she also decided it would be alright to leave her sister Carol home alone. Carol is a relatively independent woman in her mid-50s who has Down's syndrome.

Savarise arranged for on and off caretakers to check on Carol intermittently while she was gone, and thought everything would be fine because her sister is typically independent. She has her own apartment below Joan, and from day to day, takes care of herself.

After Savarise left, everything was fine until Carol decided to take over the upstairs portion of Savarise's home while they were away. She decided to cook in their microwave even though she didn't know how to use it, and in a matter of time the food was burning. Carol didn't know what to do. She called Savarise's mother, who is in an assisted living facility and can't drive, and the mother called the fire department to check things out.

A little later Savarise got a call in California and she was on the next available flight home. Vacation cancelled.

"I would have had to have someone checking in regularly on Carol," said Savarise.

It's stories like this and others which led Savarise to become steadily involved with Friendship Home, a group of people dedicated to creating a respite home for adults with mental retardation to be dropped off for a day or longer, allowing their caretakers a much needed break. It also gives the special needs adults a chance to socialize.

Friendship Home was the brainchild of two Norwell women, Wilma Goodhue and Joan Mullare who both have disabled children of their own. Goodhue's 23-year-old son Michael has Down's syndrome and Mullare's 26-year-old daughter Meg exhibits autistic behaviors.

Both moms have similar stories. The problem is that their kids need constant care, and the task of finding the kind of quality care they need is not easy, especially when something comes up suddenly, Mullare said on one occasion she and her husband Ken were unable to attend a wake because they could not find anyone to take care of their daughter.

Goodhue, Mullare, and most members of Friendship Home know what it's like to be the caretaker for someone with mental retardation day in day out.

"We always put on our happy face, but on the inside it isn't easy," said Goodhue. "Joan and I could not go on a vacation if we didn't know Meg and Michael were having a good time. And other families feel the same."

Their inspiration grew out of their own situations, but they realize that there are hundreds of other families who need respite.

The problem has many dimensions. Not only do the parents bear the burden full time, it also has a steady impact on siblings who don't receive enough attention, as well as a negative impact on the special needs individuals themselves. There's also the fact that many people at Mullare's and Goodhue's age have found themselves in a position where they are also caring for their parents, who are elderly. Being wedged between two close relatives in need of daily care can complicate life in an era in which day to day living is hectic enough in itself.

The flip side of the story is after they finish school, many people with mental retardation wind up staying at home a lot of the time. Mullare said the phone doesn't ring much for Meg, and Goodhue said the same of Michael. They're hoping Friendship Home is going to be part of the answer to that problem as well.

After years of talking about how much the South Shore needs this kind of service, and waiting for someone else to do something about it, Mullare and Goodhue snapped into action.

For six months now a small group of parents has been meeting at the Norwell Knoll nursing home once a month to go over their money raising strategies and to brainstorm ideas. During those hours, their kids are being taken care of at the predecessor to Friendship Home, which is the Friendship Club.

Friendship Club is closely linked to the idea of Friendship Home. Once a week mentally retarded adults have been meeting at the Norwell Council on Aging, on a sign-up basis, for a little bit of fun and a chance to get out of the house. This also allows parents a break, and a small sample of what is to come when the Friendship Home is complete. And even when Friendship Home is complete, the club will live on.

But for now the parents have been making good use of Friendship Club time in order to further their plan. And the plan is relatively simple. Friendship Home has to come up with approximately $1 million to buy land and build the home, and from there the Department of Mental Retardation will take over by providing and paying for services.

If Mullare, Goodhue and the rest of the group could have their way, the home will have eight beds and it will be an old federal style house that sits on a nice, big piece of land. They're also hoping it will be in one of the South Shore's more rural towns.

Area director of the south coastal region of DMR Kathleen Catano said she's very excited about the possibility of creating a respite home on the South Shore.

"The efforts of this group have been absolutely outstanding," Catano said. "They've been able to garner quite a lot of support in only a little bit of time."

The south coastal region of DMR encompasses Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth. And in those towns alone there are 878 registered adults with mental retardation who could benefit from this home.

Catano said there are a couple of ways DMR typically provides family support. One of those ways is sending someone to take care of the child at their own home, and another is providing some kind of in-house service. In her opinion, the overnight services work better. She reiterated the fact that this isn't only good for the caretakers, it's great fun for the people who will be staying in the home.

She said the service would be provided on the behalf of families that they are already serving in Massachusetts.

There are other homes of this kind in Massachusetts, but none of them are within comfortable reach of the South Shore. The other two homes run by DMR are in Westwood and Natick and each has five beds. But neither of those was funded by local people.

Another inspiration for Mullare and Goodhue came through the example of Mary McQueeney and Sharon Lisnow, who created a similar home in Hopkington. They organized their community and eventually built the Michael-Carter Lisnow Respite Center, which is named for Lisnow's late son. Although that home is run as a non-profit business without DMR involvement, it certainly gave Mullare and Goodhue a good starting point.

After they finally dedicated themselves to the idea things began moving quickly. Since they officially kicked off their mission six months ago, it has gained a lot of support in town. They've had several successful fundraisers and a lot of people seem to be realizing the group's vision.

At the Norwell Men's Club Fair in June, the group raised money through walking in the parade and selling various goods. They teamed up with Jack Conway Realty to create a float in the parade with a "home" motif. Goodhue said there were people of all ages out there backing the project.

Donations have been coming in from various avenues as well. Chris and Rose Kierce asked that all donations in their daughter's name be forwarded to the Friendship Home. Their daughter Rose Marie, who had special needs, passed away recently.

"They saw our vision and they realized our need," said Goodhue.

Those fundraisers and donations, as well as many others have given them a boost, but now it's time to bring the endeavor to the next level. They're hoping to gain corporate sponsorship, find someone who is a skilled grant writer, and to incorporate as many people as they can get involved in the project. Whether it be brainstorming, fundraising or actually building the house when the time comes. They hope to complete the home either in 2001 (which they admit is a long shot) or in 2002.

Goodhue said she's hoping the community at large will feel this thing in their hearts, and begin helping out.

"We want people's hearts to be in this," said Goodhue. She said anyone is welcome at their meetings.

The only problem so far is that out of the 10 towns lined up to benefit from the idea, only Norwell and Scituate have been steadily involved. The other eight towns have been comparatively silent. But they see it as a matter of public relations, and they're hoping to spread awareness any way they can.

"We're looking for more people to join us from the northern tier up there," said Mullare.

And they're also looking for help from people in towns that aren't in the South Coastal area, but will likely be able to benefit from it as well, such as Hanover, Marshfield, Abington and Rockland.

Catano, at DMR, said while the home is being developed for the South Coastal area specifically, they aren't going to rule other people out.

"If someone wanted to come from a different area, such as Plymouth area, Hanover, Rockland, Marshfield, then it might be possible for them to do that."

"We'd like help from other communities so they can be better represented," said Goodhue, who is convinced that regardless of where you're from, you reap more than you sow by getting involved.

"We're really enjoying doing this," she said.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

School bus safety tips

Tips courtesy of the AAA traffic Safety Department and Safety Officer Rick Yocum. Tips are also available at the Cohasset Police Department website: www.cohassetpd.org.

1. Leave home early enough to arrive at your bus stop.
2. Wait for your bus in a safe place-well away from the road.
3. Enter the bus in an orderly manner and take your seat.
4. Follow all the instructions of your school bus driver.
5. Stay in your seat while the bus is moving.
6. Keep your arms and head in the bus at all times.
7. Keep the aisles clear of books, knapsacks.
8. Please be quiet and orderly.
9. Be courteous to your school bus driver and fellow students.
10. Be alert to traffic when leaving the bus.
11. Walk to your bus stop-avoid asking your parents to drive you there.

To the Parents

Please discuss the safety tips with your children. Your children should understand that riding the bus is a privilege. Permission to continue can be withdrawn.

Register for scouts

Town wide Boy Scout and Girl Scout registration will be held at the Deer Hill School Café on Tuesday, Sept.12 from 6:30-8 p.m.

Boy Scout registration includes all boys interested in joining Tiger Cubs (first grade), Cub Scouts (second –fifth grade), and Boy Scouts (sixth grade and up).If there are any questions please call Jane Long for Tiger Cubs-383-1281 and Linda Farrag for Cub Scouts-383-9519.

Girls may join Daisies (kindergarten), Brownies (first-third grade), Juniors (fourht-sixth grade), Cadettes (seventh–ninth grade) and Seniors (10th –12th grade).

Registration fee for Girl Scouts is $7, and a parent's signature is required on all forms.

Adults are needed to lead troops, especially at the Junior fourth-grade level. Any parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles or former Scout leaders, who might be interested in becoming a leader or have any questions, please call Terry James (evenings 383-9173). The Cohasset Service Unit is also looking for positions to be filled on its Service Team. These positions include a Family Partnership chairman and a Girl Scout coordinator. If you are interested in either of these positions, please contact Nancy Bartlett at the Dedham Field Office at 1(800)637-0070.

Secondary schools at Derby Academy

Derby Academy in Hingham is hosting its fifth annual Secondary School Fair for South Shore families interested in learning more about independent secondary school educational opportunities. Scheduled for the evening of Tuesday, Sept. 19, this informative fair will run from 6:30-8:30 p.m., rain or shine.

Representatives from 60 local and regional schools from around New England will be available to meet and talk with students and parents about their special programs, whether they be coed or single sex, day or boarding, independent or Catholic. Most will have materials to hand out to visitors as well.

The fair is free and open to all, and there is no need to register early. Derby Academy, an independent, coeducational day school serving students in pre-kindergarten through grade nine, is located at 56 Burditt Ave. (across Route 3A from Hingham Harbor.

Joan Paley to sign

Noted Scituate children's illustrator Joan Paley (Little, Brown $13.95) will sign copies of her new book, Little White Duck, a sing-along story on Saturday, Sept. 16 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. This favorite song written in the 1950s has been a kid-pleaser for generations, thanks to such song stylists as Danny Kay, Burl Ives, and more recently, Raffi. The real news however is the gorgeous new illustrations offered in an oversized format. Working with cut paper, crayon, pastels and washes of watercolor Joan Paley has created luscious collages that appear three-dimensional. Paley plays the song as a play. As a guitar-playing mouse narrates, a duck, a pig and a black bug are successively introduced as happily "doing what (they) oughter . . . in the water." Then along comes a little red snake that clears the room, so to speak, by scaring the duck and frog and eating the bug, leaving the song to conclude, "Boo! Hoo! Hoo!." But the book itself ends on an up beat, with the bug, along with the rest of the cast, taking a bow as the animal audience clamors, "Bravo." Luminous and full of movement, this art will demand repeated viewing. Guitarist Norman Paley will join Joan to play this song and others. Free for all ages. Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve your signed copy.

Marijuana arrest

For the second time this summer, police arrested a Marshfield man and charged him with possession of marijuana.

At about 11:19 p.m. Saturday, police arrested Daniel Phillips, 20 of 32 Mallard Run, Marshfield, after the Nissan Sentra he was driving hit the posts that protect the fire hydrant at the entrance to the town parking lot off Ripley Road in the village.

Police observed Phillips driving erratically along Ripley Road before he attempted to make a U-turn by entering the parking lot and then hit the traffic posts.

After approaching the vehicle, police smelled marijuana smoke and said Phillips appeared to be under the influence. Phillips allegedly produced a pipe used to smoke marijuana that was still warm, police said.

Police charged Phillips whose occupation was listed as a cook at Atlantica with possession of a Class D substance (marijuana), driving under the influence of drugs, impeded operation and failure to stay within marked lanes. He was arraigned on the charges Tuesday in Quincy District Court.

Last month, police arrested Phillips and two other men on Government Island and charged them will possession of marijuana.

Cohasset traffic enforcement up

Last week Cohasset police and state police issued about 65 traffic citations at various locations around town, including Rte. 3A, Beechwood Street, and North Main, Pleasant, Sohier and South Main streets, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

The 'Thousand Brick Walkway' at Greek Church

By Mary Fillon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Everyone is welcomed to join in the celebration of this church's 100th birthday.

This church anniversary is for the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church of Cohasset.

In memory of his son, Charles Linden Pope, a father's great love was instrumental in building this beautiful Pope Memorial Church in 1900.

Many religious groups have occupied the church during the years each overcoming many challenges to their faiths with great determination and love for God.

Eighty years later with the various changes of events, as related in the enclosed papers, a very small group of dedicated Christian people made it possible to have this Pope Memorial purchased and converted into a Greek Orthodox Church.

Today it is known by all as "The Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church" of Cohasset. It is a part of the Greek Orthodox Diocese of Boston and a member of the New England Greek parishes.

Upon procurement of the church by our parish, the interior areas were laid out to conform with the Greek Orthodox Church services.

Not only is the congregation made up of families from all the local communities but the many visitors that have come to worship in our Orthodox religion have represented numerous countries from around the world.

The parishioners, approximately 150 families and increasing, are from all neighboring South Shore towns as far as Plymouth.

At present we are undertaking a great project in building a community center adjoining our existing church.

We invite all, especially former members of Pope Memorial, to join us in buying a brick, engraved with your choice of words, which will be the "walkway" for our church and new community center.

A special section of the walkway will be set aside for former Pope Memorial parishioners and friends.

In the past 20 years with the thousands of summer visitors during our yearly Fourth of July Taverna Festival; snow plows, cars and lawn mowers moving over our beautiful and very large lawn it is still a virgin green mantel with no need for reseeding.

Coincidentally or meant to be, this Greek Orthodox Church is located on Jerusalem Road.

All interested friends can purchase a brick for $50. Panagia Church, 819 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset.

Spiritual questions

Alpha, a 10-session course to examine contemporary spiritual questions, will be offered weekly Wednesday evenings by St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue in Cohasset, beginning Wednesday, Sept. 13, at 6:30 p.m. Dinner is served to begin each class. There is no cost.

"What can I believe in," and "Where is the meaning in life?" are heavy questions to carry. Alpha helps participants set them down to examine them. Tough, skeptical questions are taken seriously. Alpha is the first letter of the Greek alphabet and signifies the importance of seeking first things first. New understandings are found in topics such as "Who is Jesus?" "How and Why Do I Pray?" "Does God Heal Today?"

There is plenty of humor and good food, opportunity to get to know others who also may be questioning and to make new friends. One participant wrote to say: "Thank you for allowing non-members of St. Stephen's to attend. I truly enjoyed the fellowship and felt I had made new friends."

For more information or to register call Saint Stephen's Church at 383-1083 and ask for Jane or Cliff.

Church school

A continental breakfast and registration for Church School at Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset will take place at 9:15 a.m. on Sunday, Sept. 10. All are welcome. Walton Rogers Hall will fill with the noise of children and families as a new school year begins. After breakfast and registration parents will take their children to their classes at 9:50 a.m. The parents then will proceed to church to have the children join them for communion.

Church School classes begin with 3-year olds and go up through the church's youth ministry. A special orientation class for new children joining the pre-K and kindergarten classes (beginning age 3-1/2) will take place on Saturday, Sept. 9 at 9:30 a.m.

For more information about the Saint Stephen's Church School, call the church office at 781-383-1083.

OBITUARIES

Allen F. DeVito

Allen F. DeVito, 59, of Cohasset, formerly of Everett, died Tuesday, Sept. 5, 2000, after a long illness.

Mr. DeVito was employed at U.S. Flag Manufacturing of Quincy, previously at Federal Reserve in Boston and Federal Home Loan Bank of New York.

He was a member of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Konchusset Lodge of Cohasset, former president of Cohasset Jay Cees, Appalachia service project, and Cohasset soccer and lacrosse boosters club. He also was the original member of School Building Facilities Committee during the building of Osgood School.

He leaves his wife Bonnie L. (Thompson) DeVito, two daughters, Robin DeVito and Lauren DeVito; two sons, Kevin DeVito and David DeVito; a sister, Diane Cardello of Everett, and Richard DeVito of Andover.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Visiting hours will be Friday, Sept. 8, from 4 to 8 p.m. in the McNamara-Sparrel Funeral Home. A funeral Mass will be held at St. Luke's Church on Saturday at 11 a.m..

Memorial contributions may be made to Biologic Therapy Program, c/o Dr. James Mier, Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, Kirsten 158, 330 Brookline Ave., Boston 02215.

Janis Brown, M.D.

Dr. Janis Brown Glickman, 53, of New Haven and Dallas, Texas, former resident of Cohasset and Madison, Conn., died Aug. 3, 2000, after a brief illness.

She was born in Peoria, Ill., the daughter of Bettie and John Findeisen.

After graduating from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, she was a flight attendant for five years with Pan American Airlines, then married.

When her two children entered school, Dr. Brown returned to her own education, earning a master's degree in bacteriology at Northeastern University. She taught briefly at Quincy Community College before attending Boston University, where she earned her M.D. In 1988 she began her residency at the Yale-New Haven Hospital, at the end of which she was invited to join the faculty of the Yale University School of Medicine as Assistant Professor of Diagnostic Radiology. In 1998, soon after her promotion to associate professor, she moved to Dallas, Texas, to become the chief of ultrasound at Methodist Hospital and associate clinical professor at Southwestern Medical School, University of Texas.

She received many awards for her academic and clinical achievements. Her most cherished was Teacher of the Year, conferred by her beloved residents of the Department of Diagnostic Radiology at Yale. In addition, she lectured widely and published numerous papers in medical journals in her field of specialty, ultrasound diagnosis.

She leaves her husband, Dr. Morton Glickman, and her two children, Matthew Brown of Washington, D.C., and Katherine Brown of New York City; her mother, Betty Hedges of Lake Suzy, Fla.,; two sisters, Judith Sullivan of Lighthouse Point, Fla., and Debra Hoskins of Mission Hills, Kan.

Memorial contributions may be sent to Yale University School of Medicine for The Janis Brown Glickman Fund for Education in Diagnostic Radiology.

AN INTRODUCTION TO DIVORCE MEDIATION - Thursday, September 21, 2000, 6:30 p.m.-7:30 p.m. Learn about voluntary mediation as an alternative to costly and lengthy divorce family law litigation. The Law Office of Judith R. Kaplan, 99 Derby Street, Suite 200, Hingham. Free presentation. Seating limited. Registration required. Call 781-925-3880 or log on: www.geocities.com/yourfamilymatters. If you are unable to attend, make an appointment for a free half-hour consultation to discuss your options.

- Certainty and Control: Unlike a judge, the mediator does not decide the outcome of your dispute. The parties are empowered to make decisions with the help of a neutral mediator.
- Cost Effective: Protect your assets. Hourly rates are less than paying two attorneys to go to court.
- Save Time: Mediation can provide a quicker settlement. You are not at the mercy of the overburdened court system for scheduling motions, conferences and trials. Timing, however, ultimately depends upon the motivation of the parties and the nature of the issues.
- Confidential: The mediator cannot discuss your case outside of the mediation sessions (with some excepting) whereas court proceedings are open to the public.
- More Peaceful: Divorce can destroy a family both financially and emotionally. Protect your assets and children by minimizing the impact of the stress and trauma.

Attorney Kaplan is an experienced family law litigator who is committed to assisting families in reaching an agreement that is tailored to their own economic, social and religious needs. The parties must share the goal of resolving the matter by mutual agreement in a less confrontational setting. Before putting your life into the hands of someone else to make lifelong decisions, consider mediation as an alternative to litigation. "Advertising" under Supreme Judicial Court Rule 3:07.

Lobster Lab hopes to give young scientists place to experiment

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@MC.COM

Consider it the youth soccer equivalent of experimental science.

That's what Kevin Ulmer hopes to create with his proposal for the "Lobster Lab," to be run out of the former Cohasset Colonials showroom and offices on the town-owned Hagerty property.

The lab would be the home for extracurricular science programs for students of all ages, and would provide aspiring scientists a place to hone their skills.

Scientific research programs aren't just for high school or college students, explained Ulmer, head of Beautymedicines, Inc., a genomics lab.

"It's like what you see on a soccer field," he said. "The first year they play, they're tripping over the ball, picking up leaves, looking at the sky, but by the senior year in high school, they have a team that can do some pretty impressive things."

Ulmer came up with the idea for the lab after being asked by Rick Shea, the then president of Cohasset Education Foundation, to join the group's board of directors, with the hopes of expanding the amount of activities involving science education in town.

"The rationale behind it is, if you look at what we offer students and children in terms of facilities and activities of the extracurricular nature, they're abundant," said Ulmer. "We have every kind of sports program, and facility for track and field, the pool, soccer, hockey, sailing. For the performing arts there's all sorts of wonderful student productions. There's the South Shore Art Center for pottery, painting, sculpting. But what do we offer for students with a natural inclination towards the sciences?"

He said students have to travel into the Museum of Science or New England Aquarium to experience scientific opportunities.

He's concerned it's that lack of local opportunities that makes scientifically inclined children to hunker down behind a computer "because that's the most scientific thing they can do in a hands-on manner," he said.

"We don't offer them any science laboratory, and that's the hole I was intending to fill."

With all the various types of sciences to choose from, he chose marine biology, and particularly lobsters, because of the location of the lab. "I think a number of children have a natural interest in marine biology, playing in the tide pools, picking up the hermit crabs, and we can build on that," he said.

"The central theme of the lab, the lobster, seemed to be a good lightning rod focal point," Ulmer explained. "Historically, it's been a vital part of our economy...and it's not one of the mainstream studied organisms."

He also pointed out that though the name "Lobster Lab" has caught on, it won't limit itself just to the tasty crustaceans, instead will also focus on the lobster and its environment as a whole.

Because science classes in schools are sometimes forced to stay within narrow state guidelines, Ulmer said the lab will provide opportunities for students to run programs they're interested in.

"It will be a place where students could do student-initiated, student-conducted research. It's not really going to be a place to go and get lectured to," Ulmer said. "Our primary interest is in getting students to use their own hands and actually do research and see what it means to be a scientist. Whether it's creating hypotheses to test, developing an experiment, collecting the data, and publishing the results, every one of those steps is part and parcel of what it means to be a research scientist."

> "I think a number of children have a natural interest in marine biology, playing in the tide pools, picking up the hermit crabs, and we can build on that."
> — Kevin Ulmer

A sample experiment he gave that younger students could do is determine whether a lobster being left-handed or right-handed is random or if there is a slight bias. Ulmer said a lobster with its crusher claw on right hand, means the lobster is right handed. Children could take 100 lobsters, sort them into piles and do some simple statistics to determine how random a lobster's "handedness" is.

"That could translate in the higher levels to cutting edge research," said Ulmer. "We still don't know the purpose of handedness."

The town purchased the Hagerty property more than seven years ago, right about the time Ulmer first started deliberating on the idea of a student-orientated lab. Ulmer made the proposal to Al Moore, chairman of the town planning board, and then head of the Hagerty Property Committee which was trying to decide the future of the two-acre, waterfront parcel.

"I said why don't we use the building as a student science laboratory?" recalled Ulmer. "I want it to be a place where students could go and would have the facilities, equipment, materials and supplies, supervision and instruction and encouragement they would need to pursue their interest in scientific types of agendas."

In 1998, he went before selectmen with a plan that called for a complete renovation of the town-owned building, with it becoming fully-operational within four years. Selectmen agreed to it, giving him a $1 a year lease. However, concern arose this past summer when the building still remained untouched, two years later. Though Ulmer said he was just waiting to see what the final plans for the rest of the site would be before he started renovating the building, he did spend $15,000 scraping, priming and painting the building, as well as replastering the first-floor walls, and fixing the roof of the town-owned boathouse, also on the Hagerty property. He said he currently is working on restoring heat and electricity to the building, and hopes to hook the property up to the Parker Avenue sewer line. Ultimately, Ulmer hopes to completely renovate the building, making it three full floors, with aquarium tanks for lobsters and other exhibits, cutting-edge labs, and meeting space.

He is scheduled to meet with the zoning board of appeals Monday to begin the permit process for the $750,000 project. He also will be at the next selectmen's meeting to discuss the future of the lab. Ulmer said he is right on schedule with the four-year plan he presented to selectmen when they initially agreed to the lease.

One of the board's biggest concerns was the funding for the lab, or lack thereof. Ulmer said he has been actively lining up sponsors, and private donations for operating funds and equipment, and though he doesn't have the money literally in the bank, with projects like this, funds aren't normally given until the lab officially opens.

Ulmer said he has received a promise of a matching grant from the Jane Cook Charitable Trust for up to $82,500. He also said he has donation commitments from equipment manufacturers, and had a dozen computers donated from the old high school computer lab.

Ulmer hopes by next summer, the first-floor will be operational and ready to go.

IT'S HAPPENING

Digital art

The South Shore Art Center is, for the first time, offering a course in digital art. "Introduction to Photoshop" will teach the tools and concepts needed to work effectively in Adobe Photoshop, the software package used for enhancing, manipulating and creating images. This hands-on course will introduce students to all they need to know about the basics of image-editing including scanning, image retouching, and printing. The course will be offered off-campus at the South Shore Educational Collaborative at 90 Industrial Park Road in Hingham. Classes will meet eight Thursday afternoons, 3 to 5:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 21. Students will work on PCs and will be invited to bring their own images for scanning. A list of materials will be distributed at the first meeting. For more information or to register, call (781) 383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

Hingham Symphony auditions musicians

Hingham Symphony Orchestra's Music Director Jin Kim will audition prospective musicians for the orchestra Sept. 9, 10, 15 and 16. HSO, which will perform six concerts this season, has evolved into a semi-professional orchestra composed of full professional musicians and dedicated, accomplished amateurs.

The smaller core of amateur musicians, including high school students, rehearses weekly, for an average of eight rehearsals per concert cycle. Professionals join the orchestra for the final three rehearsals and the concert. New this year, all musicians will be paid, in recognition of the time necessary to achieve the excellence HSO is requiring of its musicians.

Local musicians, from high school age and up, are encouraged to audition. Call Managing Director Nina Wellford at 740-5694 for details.

Hull chowdafest

Advance tickets go on sale for Hull's 10th Annual Chowdafest, one of the South Shore's most popular events. The Chowdafest, set for Saturday, Sept. 16, from noon-3 p.m. at the Bernie King Pavilion on Nantasket Beach in Hull, gives visitors an opportunity to savor the flavor of Hull by sampling and voting for the areas best chowders.

This popular community event, sponsored by the Hull-Nantasket Chamber of Commerce and coordinated by Haley Events, features local restaurants vying for the honor of the area's best chowder.

Tickets are $8 per person, or $6 by advance purchase at South Shore Communications Center, 305A Nantasket Avenue, Hull, from 8 a.m.-6 p.m. weekdays and 9 a.m.-2 p.m. Saturdays.

Ticket holders are entitled to chowder samples from each participating restaurant, a beverage, entertainment and a ballot to select the year's prizewinning chowders.

Proceeds will benefit the Charles H. LaBreck III Scholarship Fund, which provides annual awards to deserving Hull High School graduates.

For further information, call Haley Events at (781) 925-8788.

House tour highlights historic river

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

What do you get when you combine scenic vistas, a historic river and grand homes? The North and South River Watershed Association's "River Views House Tour." On Sept. 10 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. visitors will be able to take this unique tour offered for the fourth time by the local environmental group. Proceeds raised from the event go toward supporting the association's programs including paddling trips, and for important water quality testing.

"What distinguishes our house tour from other ones around the area is that the focus is not actually on the houses with ours," said watershed member Paula Boyce. "Our focus is on the river."

"All these people were good enough to open their homes to us. And most of these homes are off the beaten track—they're all just beautiful."
NSRWA member Paula Boyce

"When we first started this, I saw it as a wonderful opportunity to expose people to the river," said Debbie Lenahan, another watershed association member and also the founder of the river view tour. "Some people may not know it, but the (North) River is a national natural landmark, and it's the only river in Massachusetts that's protected by law through a scenic protective order."

Boyce said the tour will feature six houses and one garden —all of the sites showcasing spectacular views of the river. Boyce said typically, 400-600 people turn

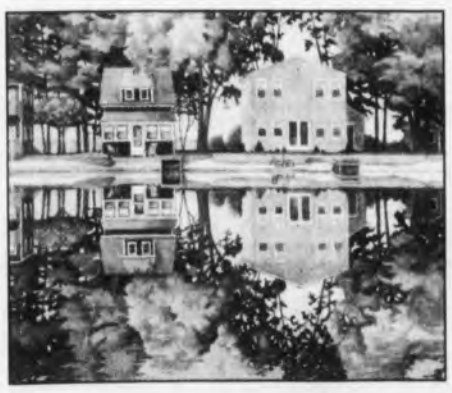
Pembroke painter featured at South Shore Natural Science Center

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

When it comes to watercolor art, Pembroke resident Becky Haletky could tell you a few things.



During her 20-year career as a watercolor artist, Haletky has won "more than 240 awards in painting and photography." She also serves as a watercolor teacher at the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton and the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

Haletky's art is now the subject of an art show called 'Waterworks" being held at the Vine Hall Gallery in the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell from Sept 2-30.

"I'm sort of an architectural painter," Haletky said, "and usually, watercolors are a challenge for me because I don't really paint nature scenes."

Haletky's art concentrates on a 1950s state of mind. Her paintings often feature old diners, 50s roadside architecture, "dead motels and old funky stores."

"I guess my fascination with all those things is so strong because I had the opportunity to travel a lot in the late 1950s and early 1960s," she said. "A lot of the images I saw just kind of stuck with me. I don't know why I was so impressed by all those sights but I was."

For her show at the science center, Haletky knew she had to feature some sort of art involving nature. All of her paintings being shown at the current exhibit still feature architecture, but they all feature water as well.

Haletky said she lives on Stetson Pond in Rice Indian style

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Christopher Kimball

For Americans, rice tends to be a rather bland side dish, often overcooked and with nothing more than a bit of salt and butter for flavoring. In India, however, rice takes center stage and is often combined with roasted spices to make it anything but pedestrian. The question was how to do this successfully and easily at home in an American kitchen.

First, let's review what I have learned about rice during years of kitchen testing. The most important discovery I made was that 1 1/2 cups of water per cup of rice is vastly better than the usual 2 to 1 ratio. This lower water/rice ratio produces rice which comes out light and fluffy, not heavy and waterlogged. Second, rice is markedly improved when sautéed briefly in oil before cooking. This also helps to keep the grains separate rather than sticky. Finally, rinsing the rice before cooking helps remove starch, a step which also contributes to a fluffier texture.

Now I wanted to test which spices worked best and how to extract their full flavor. My preference was 3 whole cloves, 1 teaspoon cardamom seeds, 1 teaspoon coriander seeds and a 2-inch piece of cinnamon bark. I also tried onion, shallot, garlic and ginger but I found them unnecessary with the spices. When I tested chicken stock versus water, the latter won out since the rice needed no help from the stock. In terms of oil versus butter, I ended up using both but I vetoed the addition of herbs in the form of cilantro, parsley or chives – the earthy flavors of the spices did not marry well with "greens." Other tests included adding yogurt, nuts, tomato – even beans and small pasta – but the simple mix of spices and rice was always superior.

Toasting the spices, a common recipe step in Indian cooking, was essential to heighten flavors. This worked best over medium heat in saucepan with a tight-fitting lid since I could use the same pan for the rice itself. I also tried grinding the spices after toasting them (except the cinnamon) and adding them back to the rice which added a bit more flavor. Finally, I found that letting the rice sit covered off the heat after about 15 minutes of cooking also helped to produce separate, not sticky, grains. This recipe is particularly good with a simple dinner of grilled meat such as a steak or chops.

RICE WITH PAN-ROASTED SPICES

Basmati rice is preferred but not essential.

1 1/2 cups basmati or long grain rice
1 teaspoon cardamom seeds
1 teaspoon coriander seeds
3 whole cloves
1 2 -inch piece cinnamon bark
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
2 1/4 cups water
3/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Place the rice in a large bowl and cover with 2 inches of cold water. Swirl the rice with your hands to help release the dirt and starch from the rice. Pour off the water and repeat until the water runs clear, about 3 times more. Drain in a mesh colander and set aside.

2. Heat a medium saucepan with a tight fitting lid (preferably with a diameter of at least 8 inches) over medium heat. Add the cardamom, coriander, cloves and cinnamon bark and cook until they darken and/or pop, stirring frequently, about 2-3 minutes. (At this point the spices, excluding the cinnamon bark, may optionally be removed, ground, and added back to the saucepan.) Lower the heat to medium-low and add the olive oil and butter. Once the butter has stopped foaming add the rice and sauté, stirring frequently, for about 2 minutes. The rice should be coated with the oil/butter but not browned.

3. Add the water, salt and a few grinds of pepper and stir briefly to combine. Lower the heat as to allow the liquid to simmer. Cover and cook until the liquid is absorbed about 16-18 minutes. (Do not remove the lid during this time.) Remove from the heat and let sit, covered, for an additional 10-15 minutes. Gently fluff the rice with a fork, taste for seasonings and serve immediately. Serves 6-8 as a side dish

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6

Storm clouds have moved out, and sunny astrological weather prevails in the next few days. The Sagittarius moon forms a harmonious alignment to Mars this morning. If you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, you can be most productive. Pay extra attention to details so that you don't overlook something significant. At 6:26 p.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive until 9:47 p.m., when it enters conservative Capricorn.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. This is a day to get things done. The moon continues to travel in business-oriented Capricorn all day. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids mental focus and discipline. Zero in on financial or business matters; you can make sensible, realistic decisions today. Mercury enters Libra at 6:23 p.m., traveling there until September 28. One of the best periods of the month for beginning new ventures, signing contracts, making commitments begins at 6:23 p.m. and ends at 6:27 a.m. tomorrow.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8

You must launch important enterprises before 6:27 a.m., when the Capricorn moon becomes inactive. Harmonious alignments of Venus to Pluto, Jupiter and Mercury to Saturn also occur today. Projects will come together easily. People will be cooperative, helpful, friendly. Influences are prime for finishing projects already begun, handling routine chores, tying up loose ends. You can be most productive. Plan a quiet evening.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

The moon enters Aquarius at 10:44 a.m., setting the stage for a relaxing, social weekend. Plan to visit or entertain friends. Get in touch with people you haven't heard from in a while. All parties, social gatherings are highlighted. Influences rate high for meeting people, establishing relationships or strengthening the ties in existing partnerships. A harmonious alignment of Mercury to Neptune also impacts the weekend. Follow your hunches; your instincts are on target. Pay attention to your dreams. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. You can achieve breakthroughs and express yourself in new ways.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

Take a vacation from stress, worry and responsibilities; be a free spirit today. An Aquarius moon may point you in new directions. Keep an open mind and go with the flow. Let fun and games top your agenda.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11

The beginning of this week has its challenges. Stay busy with practical projects rather than getting caught up in worries, self-doubt, anger. There is a rough spot at 4:09 p.m., when the Aquarius moon opposes Mars and becomes inactive. Drive with care. The moon enters Pisces at 10:34 p.m., beginning the final windup to this month's full moon.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12

The planet Saturn, standing at 1-degree Gemini, begins retrograde travel at 7:35 a.m. Saturn lends a serious, sobering energy to this full moon buildup. It brings a time to face the realities of a situation and deal with critical business or personal issues that can no longer be swept under the rug. The Pisces moon forms potentially stressful 90-degree alignments to Saturn, Pluto and Jupiter today. Plan a quiet evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep penetrating insights and find new meanings in life.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

Astrological storm clouds begin to move out today. The full moon culminates at 3:37 p.m., 21-degrees of Pisces. The moon becomes inactive at this time, traveling at the tail end of the zodiac. However, applying alignments of Mercury/Pluto and Venus/Uranus also affect the day. Mercury/Pluto can help you to find new solutions to old problems. This is a favorable influence for troubleshooting and getting to the heart of a matter. Venus/Uranus prompts you to forget your troubles and go for the good times tonight.

Big names on the small screen

Geena Davis, Oliver Platt and other movie stars turn to TV

By Josh B. Wardrop
CNC ARTS WRITER

It worked for Bruce Willis, Jim Carrey, John Travolta and Michael Douglas. It didn't work so well for Shelley Long and David Caruso. It's starting to work out well for George Clooney, after a shaky start ("Batman & Robin"?) It worked for Tom Hanks, to the tune of two Academy Awards. It wasn't such a great idea for Luke Perry, whose work went straight to cable, and sent Perry back to his old zip code.

Television stars graduating to the big screen is a rite of passage that dates back to director Sergio Leone realizing that Clint Eastwood was wasted on "Rawhide," and placing him in a series of star-making spaghetti Westerns. Since then, anyone lucky and talented enough to carve out a name for themselves on the tube has regarded it their purpose... nay, their god-given right to matriculate to a cineplex near you. (Well, except for Michael Landon, bless him. Television was good enough for him.)

So, over the years, the conventional wisdom has been that you work in TV, and hopefully someday get a shot at the movies. And, with the exception of the occasional gushy Hallmark TV movie or sweeps episode of "Law and Order," the transition has remained exclusively in one direction.

But now, as we sit on the cusp of a new television season, that theory has been thrown out the window. A movement that started as a trickle the last few seasons has become a full-fledged deluge. Take a look at your TV Guide these days, and you'll see more movie actors' names than ever before.

Gabriel Byrne. Dianne Wiest. Paul Sorvino. Mykel T. Williamson. Ruben Blades. All well-respected character actors and actresses, with an impressive array of screen credits between them. And, starting this fall, they've chucked the far-off exotic movie locales for a soundstage on a TV network's lot. And, they're just the tip of the iceberg.

Reading through the cast list of NBC's new newspaper drama, "Deadline," almost sounds like a feature film itself. Oliver Platt, who makes nearly every movie he's in just a little bit better, gets rewarded with a lead role as a controversial investigative journalist. His supporting cast is chockful of big screen veterans, including Tom Conti, Lili Taylor and Hope Davis, as well as "Cheers" star Bebe Neuwirth.

Okay, you say, so a bunch of second and third-tier film actors are on TV. Big deal. It's not like big stars would ever stoop to the rigors of a weekly series.

Really? How about Bette Midler? She's the star of her own sitcom on CBS this fall. Charlie Sheen? Yup, he joins the cast of "Spin City" this season, replacing Michael J. Fox. (In doing so, he'll take on NBC's "The West Wing," which stars his dad, Martin Sheen, who also made a couple of films, including an obscure little art-house flick called "Apocalypse Now.")

Geena Davis won an Academy Award for "The Accidental Tourist" and was nominated for another for "Thelma and Louise." Now she's the star of "The Geena Davis Show."

The truth is, more and more career film stars are making inroads to television, and finding success. It seems that television's stigma as a sort of bush league for actors has slowly been worn away, resulting in an influx of quality talent filling our screens.

The movement started several years ago, when "ER" debuted on NBC, and boasted among its excellent cast the nearly-forgotten Anthony Edwards. Edwards had a modest film career in the '80s, ("Gotcha!" ring any bells?) and had disappeared completely off the radar. Then, he took the role of Dr. Mark Greene, displayed great acting chops, and became the solid foundation on which TV's highest rated drama is based.

More stars followed quickly. Chuck Norris brought his down-home chop-socky to TV as "Walker, Texas Ranger," which, despite the dubious quality of the program itself, has become an enduring hit. John Lithgow completely turned around his movie image as a creepy, menacing oddball by going all-out for laughs on "Third Rock from the Sun." James Gandolfini realized that rather than playing anonymous sadistic thugs in bad gangster movies, he could be playing a riveting king among thugs on a great gangster TV show like "The Sopranos."

Why the sudden transition to television? Well, let's start with the crass and vulgar realities of economics. The actors coming to TV are not exactly in Mel Gibson's $25 mil a film pay class. Additionally, a character actor's roles tend to come more sporadically, and often the film's budgets are low. With a TV series, there's something to be said for a regular paycheck.

However, there are also creative advantages to dipping a toe back into the TV pool. Think of it from an actor's perspective: when they're making a film, many months of preparation go into the refinement of a character. The best character actors will reach a point where they completely embody a role, trying to understand every nuance and facet of their part. Then, the film is made, and they have less than two hours of total screen time to bring that character to life.

With a television series, an actor can spend weeks, months, sometimes years with a character. Knowing that there will be new installments of that character's life every week allows more room for a deeper, richer interpretation of a role, which serves only to involve the viewer more with the show.

Television offers opportunities for lower-profile actors to strut their stuff. In the world of film, where every producer wants to land the same dozen stars who can "open" a film, it's a tough proposition for a Dylan McDermott or Rob Lowe to get anything juicy to gnaw on. In the world of television, they get to star in respected dramas like "The Practice" and "The West Wing."

Add to all this the gradual improvement in the overall quality of television writing that has emerged in recent years, from writers like Aaron Sorkin (who has also worked in films, notably "A Few Good Men"), and you can see the appeal for actors to come and ply their trades for America's TV viewers.

Sure, the end result occasionally misfires. Nathan Lane's "Encore, Encore" from a couple seasons back was a huge flop. But, for the most part, film actors have found success in TV, and a continued migration seems likely. Comics Denis Leary and Damon Wayans have already shot pilots for mid-season replacement shows, and more are likely. All of which is likely to benefit viewers, if only by taking away jobs from the likes of Dave Coulier, Antonio Sabato and, well, Shelley Long (ouch).

Pembroke, and it was there she found inspiration for her architecture/nature paintings.

"The show (at the science center) features 22 of my paintings," she said, "and every painting involves water. I guess the theme I am trying to get across is man's fascination with water. People build careers around water, and a great deal of recreational activities are centered around it as well."

One of Haletky's paintings featured in the science center show and titled "Early Morning Canoe Ride" won first place at the North River Arts Festival in May.

Haletky said most of the paintings included in her show are local scenes from towns like Cohasset, Pembroke, and even a few from Cape Cod.

But Haletky is not only a watercolor artist. In order for her to paint her pictures, she takes photographs. Haletky studied photography closely at the Massachusetts College of Art in Boston.

"I paint from photos I take," she said. "But I don't really paint everything that's actually in a given photograph. Rather, I use photos as a reference for my painting. So I guess you couldn't call what I paint photo realism—it's more like 'Becky realism.'"

Whatever she considers her style to be, it has carried her a long way.

"I make my living as a painter," she said.

But Haletky had no idea it would turn out that way. When she was in college, she had aspirations of getting into the realm of photography. But she eventually found that she could use her photography as a basis for painting, so she taught herself how to paint.

"I think that's kind of what makes my work unique," she said, "the fact that I'm self-taught."

Haletky said because she has always worked within the realms of both photography and water colors, it would be hard for her to separate the two art forms.

"I don't think I could do the watercolors without the photography," she said.

Although she finds inspiration in architecture, there are other aspects of art which she finds impressive.

"I find I'm often impressed by art that I don't think I could do," she said. "I'm impressed by works of art that are beyond my comprehension."

But it's easy to understand that out for the event.

"It doesn't get overcrowded though," she said, "people won't feel overwhelmed."

The featured homes include "The Cottage" on the Massachusetts Audubon Society property in Marshfield, The Linskey Home (Marshfield), The Zurif Home (Marshfield), The Warner Home (Marshfield), The Tower Home (Hanover), and The Nardini Home (Scituate). The featured garden is called the Elliot Garden on Corn Hill Lane in Marshfield.

"All these people were good enough to open their homes to us," Boyce said. "And most of these homes are off the beaten track—they're all just beautiful."

"Even though we're concentrating on the river with this event, people love a good house tour," Lenahan added. "People love going into other people's houses and looking around. It's the nature of the beast."

"People keep coming. They just love it—even men actually love it because it's not decorator tour or anything like that. It's about the river and its beautiful settings."

NSRWA member Paula Boyce

Boyce said aside from looking at lavish homes and tranquil river views, the tour serves as an important fund raiser for the watershed association, and she said it also raises a significant level of public awareness regarding the north and south rivers.

"The tour gives people the opportunity to expose themselves to a scenario they're not usually exposed to," Boyce said. "It also serves as a major benefit for our organization because the funds raised help us do things like water testing and to offer programs like walks and (river) paddles. The watershed association is dedicated to preserving water quality."

Each year the tour seems to grow in popularity, Boyce said.

"People keep coming," she said. "They just love it—even men actually love it because it's not decorator tour or anything like that. It's about the river and its beautiful settings."

"We all live in a very special place," Lenahan said, "and this kind of tour helps people discover that fact."

Tickets for the tour can be purchased in advance for $18 at Daylily in Norwell, Culhane's Card Shop in Hanover, Marshfield Office Supply, The Quarterdeck in Scituate, or Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset. On the day of the tour tickets can also be purchased for $20 at the Audubon Society's South Shore Sanctuaries on Route 3A in Marshfield.

For more information on the river views tour call the watershed association at (781) 659-8168.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Cheeseburgers in Paradise

The Plymouth County Board of Realtors sponsored a networking party, Jimmy Buffet/Cheeseburgers in Paradise (gourmet cookout) Saturday night.

It was certainly a fabulous evening for fun and great networking. The weather was perfect for this indoor/outdoor event. The evening was cool, and mosquitoes were biting elsewhere but not at camp Kiwanee in Hanson. There were paddleboats on the lovely lake, on which the rustic lodge overlooks with its huge wraparound porch. Guests and members were able to visit and get to know one another while sipping frozen Margaritas or in the tradition of Buffet parties Corona's with lime. The dinner catered by " Talk of the Town Caterers and Bakers" out of Hingham was just fabulous! Many sponsors helped to make the event so successful by sponsoring items so that this evening could be done at a reasonable price for the members and guests. This is not a moneymaker but rather a break-even event for members to have an opportunity to visit, and network with other members of the industry.

The sponsors included:

Fruit Station: Spillane & Epstein, PC

Appetizers: Tiger Home Inspection, Imperial Inspection, Mt. Washington Bank and Bank of America

Dessert Bar: Attorney Joyce Friedman and Scituate Federal Savings Bank, and Dedham Savings

Salad Bar: Bayside Home Mortgage, and Brockton Credit Union

Coffee Bar: Hingham Institute for Savings

Margarita Bar: Community Newspaper Company

Lodge Sponsor: Boston Globe

Clam Chowder: Plymouth Savings Bank

Hot Dogs and Burgers: The Patriot Ledger

Campfire " with marshmallows": Cambridgeport Bank

Paddleboat Sponsor: Bridgewater Savings

Raffled Item Sponsors

Round of Golf for three at White Cliffs Country Club: Christopher Dold with Plymouth Mortgage Bank

Red Sox Tickets: Tiger Home Inspection and Mt. Washington Bank

Dinner for Two at Boca's Restaurant: Don Parsons with Prime Mortgage

Free Radon Test: Imperial Home Inspection

Fresh Water Pearl collar with 14K gold Beads: South Shore Diamond Exchange

$50 gift certificate to Tomasi's Nursery: Steve Tomasi

Two Seat Tickets to the Jimmy Buffet Concert: Barbara Chandler of DeWolfe/Marshfield

Proceeds from the ticket sale of concert tickets are going to the American Cancer Society in memory of Dennis Monihan late director of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors

Cheeseburgers in Paradise was planned and organized by a committee that knows how to have fun. They are Pegi Brock event chairman and manager of the Marshfield/DeWolfe, Don Parsons with Prime Mortgage, Chris Dold with Plymouth Mortgage Bank, Chris Peck and Gretchen Arthurs with Dewolfe/Duxbury and Maureen McDonnell with DeWolfe/ Norwell. They of course could not have done all that they did without the help of Marilyn Werkheiser, Jenn Miller and Kim Howes from the Plymouth County Board of Realtors.

This year's event was encouraged so that members of the South Shore Board of Realtors and the Plymouth County Boards could get to know one another as plans are being discussed for a culmination of the two boards.

"We tried to come up with a theme that could draw many members, make it fun, offer entertainment, good food, all at a reasonable price while still giving members and guests the ability to talk," said Pegi Brock event chairman. "This was accomplished, and it was a huge success with just under 200 registrations, and approximately 175 attendees. Many thanks to all of you who helped make this such a fun and memorable event, we could not have done it without you."

Multi-family homes are hard to find

Sales of two-, three- and four-family homes began to moderate across Massachusetts during the first halt of this year, declining 6.5 percent from 3,508 units closed in the first six months of 1999 to 3,279 in the same period this year, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

"Like the single-family market, the multi-family housing market has felt some effect from rising interest rates this year. Especially hit has been sales of two-family homes, which have become a popular starter home market for entry-level buyers."

MAR President Fred Meyer

The decrease in sales activity follows 18 consecutive quarters of year-to-year sales increases between the second quarter of 1995 and the fourth quarter of 1999 and reflects a general easing in housing demand due to higher mortgage rates, volatility in the financial markets, and limited inventory levels in many communities, industry officials said.

"Like the single-family market, the multi-family housing market has felt some effect from rising interest rates this year. Especially hit has been sales of two-family homes, which have become a popular starter home market for entry-level buyers," stated MAR President Fred Meyer.

"More than anything, however, multi-family sales are suffering from lack of inventory and tight supply. Record sales over the past four years and a dearth of new multi-family

Colorful blooms for the late summer landscape

By Suzanne Mahler

PART 2—SWEET PEPPERBUSHES, HYDRANGEAS AND SOURWOODS

As I haul load after load of towering weeds to a mountainous compost heap, I reflect on how differently each gardener views wild plants depending on their position in the landscape. In my wetlands meadow or by the roadside, I delight in the wildflowers which somehow manage to survive in extreme environments, yet these same plants, when found lurking in the perennial border or the vegetable garden, suddenly become irritating intruders, hence the old adage, "one man's weed is another man's wildflower." As I yank fleabane, smartweed, and jewelweed, I am only too aware that these wild plants and many of their friends have already spread bountiful quantities of seed for next season.

On my journey up the hill to the top of my massive compost pile, I stop to squeeze a swollen seed capsule of the jewelweed happily growing in the moist, rich soil. A favorite wildflower since my childhood, this ever-present member of the Impatiens family, also known as spotted touch-me-not, brings back fond memories of my carefree youth. The slightest touch on the tip of a very ripe seedpod sends seeds catapulting in all directions as the fleshy pod curls up once its seeds have been dispensed. Its dangling, bright orange, tubular flowers are a favorite of the hummingbirds and it is said that when a killing frost blackens this plant, these tiny birds begin their long journey south. If the foliage is picked and held under water, the source of its common name of jewelweed becomes apparent, as the leaves shimmer, appearing to be made of polished silver.

The use of native plants in the landscape has been gaining in popularity in recent years with the growing interest in low maintenance gardening and frequent water restrictions. One of our loveliest, late-blooming native shrubs is the sweet pepperbush or summersweet which can be found growing in moist woodlands or wetland habitats. Handsome, glossy, deep green leaves are topped by 6-inch spikes of feathery white flowers. Deliciously fragrant, the blossoms are attractive to hummingbirds, butterflies and bees. Although these attractive shrubs thrive in moist, partial shade, they are adaptable to a wide range of growing conditions. They reach a mature size of 8 feet, expanding yearly by suckers and appreciate renewal pruning to remove older shoots in early spring. Several lovely cultivars are available including C. "Hummingbird," a compact grower reaching a height of only 3 feet with a multitude of white spires and several pink-flowering varieties, "Rosea," "Pink Spires," and "Ruby Spice," the last of which bears deep rose buds opening to paler pink flowers.

I delight in the wildflowers which somehow manage to survive in extreme environments, yet these same plants, when found lurking in the perennial border or the vegetable garden, suddenly become irritating intruders, hence the old adage, "one man's weed is another man's wildflower."

The use of native plants in the landscape has been gaining in popularity in recent years with the growing interest in low maintenance gardening and frequent water restrictions.

The sourwood tree (Oxydendrum arboreum), which grows as a small tree or multi-stemmed shrub in woodlands or along streamsides in the eastern half of our country, is a handsome landscape specimen which should really be better known. Its glossy, dark green leaves provide spectacular fall color turning brilliant shades of red in autumn. In late summer, clusters of white flowers, reminiscent of andromeda, appear at a time when few other trees are blooming.

The blue mist shrub, Caryopteris, has been a personal favorite since my mother introduced it to me more than 20 years ago. While not a native, this small, 3-foot shrub has survived, thrived and seeded itself around my garden for years, although it may succumb in a particularly harsh winter. An ideal specimen for a mixed perennial border as well as an attractive addition to a foundation planting, it displays silvery gray, aromatic foliage highlighted by clusters of delicate, fluffy blue flowers in late summer and early autumn. Best grown in well-drained soils in full sun to light shade, pruning should be performed in early spring as these shrubs bloom on new wood. Several equally lovely cultivars are currently offered at our local nurseries including "Dark Knight" and "Longwood Blue" which exhibit particularly deep blue flowers, and "Worcester Gold" which provides soft, yellow-green foliage and lavender-blue flowers.

Perhaps the showiest of our late-blooming shrubs are the so-called "PeeGee" hydrangeas, "PeeGee" serving as an abbreviation for the botanical name, H. paniculata "grandiflora." This popular shrub boasts long-lasting pyramidal clusters which provide lasting color from July through autumn. Arching branches produce coarse foliage and present a rounded form reaching 15 feet or more at maturity. The mostly sterile florets open creamy white and gradually fade to mauve pink as the season progresses. At the end of the growing season, the flower clusters turn a soft beige offering excellent winter interest. Often pruned to a single trunk producing a small, handsome tree, this hydrangea grows well in sun to partial shade. Plant in a rich, organic soil, and fertilize annually. Selective pruning need only be done in early March to thin or rejuvenate an overgrown specimen.

Another cultivar of the panicle hydrangea, H. "Tardiva," blooms even later in the season as a 6-to-8-foot shrub. White pyramidal flower heads are a mix of sterile ray florets and fertile flowers and appear in late August and early September. This cultivar has also become available in tree-form in recent years.

IN BRIEF

Workshop for first-time home buyers

The Neighborhood Housing Services, an approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding an accredited and MHFA certified First Time Homebuyer's Workshop in collaboration with the Massachusetts Co-Operative Bank on Saturday, Oct. 7. The workshop will be held at The Roche Brothers Supermarket, 2nd floor community room, 101 Falls Blvd., Quincy, from 9 a.m. until 3:30 p.m.

Attendance at this one-day workshop is mandatory to receive your home-buying certificate which is mandatory by most lenders to qualify for the many different mortgage options such as the Mass Housing Finance Agency, Soft Second Programs, down payment and closing costs grants and other special first-time home buyer financing options.

Neighborhood Housing Services is non-profit organization dedicated to assisting first-time buyers through the home-buying process. The staff at NHS is unique in their approach to obtaining down payment and closing costs assistance as well as rehab grants for their clients, which are available throughout the entire South Shore area. Don't miss this opportunity to find out how you or someone you know can buy a home with little or no money down.

The agenda will be comprehensive and individualized. The focus will be on the many changing aspects of home-buying, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Advanced registration is required and space is limited. A $10 refundable registration fee is required.

Call Debbie Kidd at (617) 770-2387 for more information and to register for this workshop.

Rhodes appointed Eastern Massachusetts agent representative

Connecticut Attorneys Title Insurance Company, New England's largest domestic title insurance underwriter, announced the appointment of Laura M. Rhodes to the position of Eastern Massachusetts Agency Representative. In her new position, Ms. Rhodes will recruit and assist attorney agents in eastern Massachusetts including Cape Cod and the Islands.

Rhodes has been involved in the real estate industry for the past eight years. Prior to joining CATIC, she was client account specialist for Standard Solutions, Inc., a developer of real estate closing software. A certified paralegal, she has also held positions in the real estate departments of two local law firms as well as the mortgage closing and commercial loan departments of New Bedford Institution for Savings, currently Compass Bank, and Fleet Bank.

In making the announcement Peter Wittenborg, who heads CATIC's Eastern Massachusetts Office stated "We are very pleased to add Laura to our team. With first hand experience in both a law firm and a local lending institution, Laura possesses a detailed understanding of the intricacies of the real estate closing process, and brings to CATIC the perspective we require to successfully provide our services in eastern Massachusetts."

Rhodes holds a paralegal certificate from Bridgewater State College and has completed the American Institute of Banking course Law And Banking Principles. In addition, she has taught in the paralegal program at Fisher College.

Exquisite Dutch Colonial

Majestically situated high atop Holly Hill on more than an acre of private grounds sits this quality, almost 3,000 sq. ft., Dutch Colonial with four good-sized bedrooms, two full and two half-baths, finished lower level, two FHA furnaces, 300-amp. electrical service and spacious two-car garage with additional work area and storage. Possible buildable lot is included in this exquisite home offering.

All four bedrooms are on the second floor, the master having its own bath along with a door leading to what was formerly a roof deck and could easily be converted back to same. A view of the blue Atlantic is afforded from almost every room.

Entertainment-size, front-to-back living room with Tennessee marble fireplace has French doors that lead to two inviting three-season sun porches.

Kitchen with its imported Italian tile floor and back-splash boasts breakfast room, small pantry, utility closet and "Good morning" staircase.

Formal dining room has expansive views and also has French doors leading to convenient sun room for after-dinner enjoyment.

The lower level is partially finished and with creative planning could be quite the ideal setup for the extended family having large windows and sliding glass door leading to an outside patio overlooking large terraced yard.

The generous-size sparkling in-ground pool with its surrounding deck and patio including brick fireplace just begs for family fun and entertaining.

IN BRIEF

Crescent Realty welcomes Perrotta

At a recent sales meeting, Michael Richardson, president Crescent Realty, announced the association of a new sales associate, Ben Perrotta. In his welcoming remarks, Richardson praised Perrotta for outstanding performance at his previous office and for the fine reputation he has earned in the real estate industry.

Perotta resides in Pembroke with his wife Tara and son, Nicholas, 19 months old.

Cellucci joins commercial sales team

Daniel J. Flynn & Co., Inc., a Quincy-based commercial, residential and auction real estate firm, welcomes Marc Cellucci to the ranks of its commercial sales team.

Prior to joining Flynn & Co., Cellucci served as a real estate sales associate for a Boston-based brokerage firm. As a lifelong resident of Quincy, he has a unique appreciation of the inner workings of the community.

Flynn & Co. President Paul Talkowski says that an additional broker with local expertise will pay immediate dividends for the firm.

"Marc's background as a real estate professional and as a Quincy native will strengthen our firm's ability to provide effective brokerage service to Quincy's business community," Talkowski said.

Daniel J. Flynn & Co. is a full service real estate firm specializing in commercial sales and leasing, residential real estate and real estate auctions. For more information, call 617-479-9000, or visit on the web at www.djflynn.com.

Multi-family homes are hard to find

construction have limited opportunities for both first-time buyers and investors to enter this market."

Across the state, sales of two to four family homes slipped 5.1 percent in the first quarter, from 1,496 units in the first three months of 1999 to 1,419 in the comparable period this year, and fell 7.6 percent in the second quarter, from 2,012 units in the April-June quarter a year ago to 1,860 in the same three-month period of 2000.

Much of the decrease in sales activity was limited to the greater Boston area, where the multi-family housing supply is most depleted.

Sales of multi-family homes remained strong in several regions during the first six months of the year, the MAR report shows. Healthy sales gains occurred in both the central (Worcester County) and west regions, where sales rose 13.3 percent and 12 percent respectively in the first half of 2000 over the same period last year.

In addition, multi-family home sales increased a modest 0.8 percent in the Northeast region during the period, while sales were essentially stable both on Cape Cod, where sales dipped by one unit, and the South Shore, where units sold declined three units from one year ago.

Much of the decrease in sales activity was limited to the greater Boston area, where the multi-family housing supply is most depleted.

Despite the slower statewide sale pace, the total dollar volume for multi-family home sales increased 28 percent during the first half of the year, an indication that demand for multi-family properties remains quite strong despite higher prices.

Total dollar volume for two-, three- and four-family properties increased from $567,603,960 in the first six months last year to $727,175,386 from Jan.-June 2000, raising the average value of multi-family homes to $221,767.

In many areas of the state, duplexes and other small, multi-family properties have become an affordable alternative to the higher priced single-family market. The strong rental market across the state should stimulate purchases and keep multi-family home sales fairly strong for many months to come, Meyer predicted.

Frequent flyer miles have a cost

George Hobica

Q. We're visiting Europe this fall, and will be traveling on our own from London to Brussels, Brussels to Paris, Paris to Milan and then Milan to Rome.

We're debating whether to fly between these cities or take the train. What do you think?

A. Europe's "premier" trains (such as Eurostar, Thalys, TGV and ICE) are so fast now that it doesn't make sense to endure the hassles and expense of air travel between major cities.

In many cases, such as London-Paris and Paris-Brussels, city center to city center travel times are as fast using the rails as they are by air (about three hours), with no lengthy check-in times, waits to get your bags or air traffic control delays.

It sounds like a Europass or Eurail Pass would be a good idea for your itinerary. For information, contact Rail Europe (1-888-382-7245, www.raileurope.com) or your travel agent.

Q. Is there a credit card with a low interest rate that also awards frequent-flyer miles?

A. Not really. You're going to pay for those frequent-flyer miles one way or another, and most banks make you pay for them with high annual fees and interest rates of 20 percent or more.

Capital One (www.capitalone.com or 1-800-933-5182) does have a card that offers a fixed rate as low as 9.9 percent and gives one mile for every dollar, but I wouldn't rush out to get one since it has limitations.

I have a card that has no annual fee and a fixed rate of 5.9 percent that doesn't award miles. If you don't carry a balance, then it doesn't really matter what your rate is. If you carry a large balance and pay a high interest rate, then the frequent-flyer miles may not be worth it.

Q. On July 17, I called Council Travel to book a round-trip flight from Boston to Chicago. I spoke to an employee who told me there was a flight on Continental for $194. I thought that sounded great. He told me to come and pick it up at the office. I asked him the price again and he again quoted me $194.

The problem is that when I went to pick up the ticket that day, they told me the price was $242.18. I paid for it because I was in a hurry and my flight was that Friday, July 2.

The situation reeks of consumer fraud. Every travel agency that I called previous to this one told me the total price up front. I talked to the supervisor at Council, but he refused to refund the (difference).

Should I call the attorney general's office or the Better Business Bureau? I don't think it was a bargain (either).

A. Well, actually it was a bargain. Try going to Travelocity or any regular travel agent and pricing out a ticket from Boston to Chicago with four days advance notice, which is what you gave them. It costs well over $1,000 round-trip. I agree that $194 is even better than $250, and that travel agents (and all Web sites for that matter) should state up front what the taxes, fees and surcharges are so you can have a true final price.

Until the law requires them to do so, however, it's the consumer's responsibility to ask what the final price, including the hidden extras, will be. The bottom line is that Council, which specializes in last-minute and student fares, saved you a ton of money compared to the price you would have gotten from an airline at such short notice. I honestly wouldn't go call out the troops over $50.

Q. Can I rent a BMW in Amsterdam and drive to other countries (Austria, Switzerland, etc.)? And, can I drop it off at the Paris airport? Any idea of the costs?

A. There are numerous auto rental companies that rent luxury cars in Europe, but you'll pay dearly for the privilege. Car availability and cost depend on when and where you are picking up your car.

For example, if you rent a BMW 328i convertible from Auto Europe (1-888-223-5555; or www.autoeurope.com), picking it up on Oct 13 in Amsterdam and dropping it off eight days later in Paris, the rate is $4,615, inclusive of all insurance.

If, however, you were to pick up and drop off the car in Paris, the rate drops to $3,897, since Paris is one of the locations where they have luxury cars on hand.

Driving through Austria and Switzerland is allowed, but you're limited to 200 km per day. If that price seems a tad steep, Budget Rent A Car (1-800-472-3325; www.budgetrentacar.com) offers a Mercedes E-class (they don't have BMWs in their European fleet) for approximately $1,200 for the same dates, not inclusive of insurance, which runs about $20 per day.

Your best bet is to call either of these companies and check with them for your specific dates.

Primary race too close to call

Voters go to polls Tuesday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state primary will be held Tuesday, Sept. 19, with a number of local races slated for the ballot.

Polls open in both Cohasset and Hingham at 7 a.m. and close at 8 p.m.

In Cohasset, registered voters may cast their ballots at town hall on Highland Avenue. In Hingham, residents living in precincts one, two and three vote at East School, and residents in precincts four and five vote at the Middle School on Main Street.

One of the more exciting races is between Hingham Democrats Mike Holden and Garrett Bradley, who are fighting for the right to face off against Republican Mary Anne McKenna, also of Hingham, and independent candidate Walter Murray of Hull, for the district's state representative seat. McKenna is running unopposed.

Incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, decided not to run for reelection after 26 years on Beacon Hill.

Holden and Bradley have both spent the summer canvassing the district, and are making their final preparations for election night. Bradley, who won the Democratic primary in 1998 in a close race against Josh Cutler, but lost in the general election to Murray, will hold a reception at the Hingham Sons of Italy off Route 3A, starting at 8 p.m., after the polls close. According to Bradley, who has knocked on 9,500 homes during his campaign, the response he has received from the district has been "great."

As for an election night prediction, Bradley said "I always believe it's going to be close…I'm just going to go out and work hard and hope people will consider voting for me."

The Holden camp will be entrenched at the George Mealy Post 118, on Summer Street in Cohasset. Holden said he is "cautiously optimistic" about the election and will continue to be campaigning to the end. He also hopes that early predictions of a low Democrats Garrett Bradley, left, and Mike Holden, right, get ready for last week's debate. The event, moderated by the Hingham League of Women Voters, featured the two Hingham residents hoping to win their party's nod on Sept. 19.

Bradley and Holden make their voices heard

Address issues in primary debate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Democrats Garrett Bradley and Mike Holden both say they have the strong voice Hingham, Cohasset and Hull need on Beacon Hill.

The two candidates vying for their party's nod in next week's primary attempted to differentiate themselves from the other during a face-to-face debate last Thursday at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island and sponsored by The Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner.

The successful candidate will face off against Republican Mary Ann McKenna and independent Walter Murray in November for the state representative seat currently held by Mary Jeannette Murray.

The debate, held before an overflow crowd, gave an opportunity for the two candidates — both young lawyers from Hingham — a chance to show voters there are differences between them, despite some of their similarities.

And though their differences were not dramatic, Holden and Bradley did express opposite views on issues such as mandatory sentencing guidelines and the use of tobacco settlement money to fund health care reforms.

Debate will be aired on cable

The Bradley-Holden debate will be televised on cable Thursday at 9 p.m. and Monday at 5 p.m.

Responding to a question asked by one of the three debate panelists, Bradley said the recent uproar over Suffolk County Judge Maria Lopez's decision not to give any jail time in a kidnapping and attempted sexual assault case is a good example as to why mandatory sentencing guidelines are needed.

"There are certain crimes that need mandatory sentences," said Bradley, a former prosecutor in Hingham and Brockton.

Bradley discussed a piece of legislation that has been debated in the Legislature that would give three-time convicted drunk drivers a three-year probation period, 14-day inpatient stay and three-month class.

He said though he was against this mandatory sentence — calling it not strong enough — he would favor a law requiring a person convicted of abusing a child to serve the full sentence, without probation. "Sixty-five percent of people on probation commit crimes while on probation, so I don't agree with more [of it]."

Holden preached a more progressive method, saying he is against mandatory sentences, instead urging treatment along with some jail time. "We need to do more than just send somebody away," he said.

Throughout the campaign, Bradley has talked of a plan to use part of the state's $8.2 billion tobacco lawsuit settlement for aid to cities and towns currently taxed to the limit.

Candidates square off

State Senate hopefuls tell what unites and divides them

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The Democratic party will go in united on Nov. 7 to battle for the Senate seat now occupied by the Republican incumbent.

The two contenders for the Democratic nomination to carry the banner forward against Sen. Robert Hedlund in next month's general election have one common goal, to claim that Statehouse seat for a Democrat.

James Cantwell, 33, of Weymouth and Ted LeClair, 33, of Marshfield made clear who the real opponent was in Monday night's debate sponsored by Community Newspaper Company at the historic Winslow House in Marshfield.

"If Ted wins the election, I will be there, right by his side," Cantwell said.

Debate of Democrats for state Senate will be aired on local cable access.

"Either one of us could do a better job than Bob Hedlund," LeClair said. "No matter who wins the primary, we will work together to have an effective voice in the Senate."

The three-way debate, with Hedlund a ghost participant, was a prelude to the battle between the Democrat and Republican contenders for the state Senate seat that will begin next Tuesday night as soon as the vote count is in.

Both candidates criticized Hedlund as ineffective and contrasted their stands on the state income tax rollback, education, and health care with the Weymouth Republican's.

The Winslow House, site of the law office of legendary Daniel Webster, was standing-room-only when the debate began in the rustic meeting room at 7 p.m. CNC Editor in chief Mark Skala hosted the debate. Moderating the event was Kathryn Hasenjaeger of the state League of Women Voters. After opening remarks, the candidates

Virus found in Hingham crow

By Carol Britton Meyer and Rick Collins
CMEYER@CNC.COM & RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A dead crow found in Hingham at the end of August has tested positive for the West Nile virus.

But, says Cohasset Board of Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, there's a need to be cautious but not to panic.

"Hopefully people who haven't been taking precautions will start to think seriously about doing that," he said.

The West Nile Virus (WNV) is transmitted from infected birds to mosquitoes, then to humans. There is no evidence that a person can get WNV from handling live or dead infected birds.

According to Bruce Capman, executive health officer in Hingham, mosquitoes become infected when they feed on infected birds and can then transmit WNV to humans and animals while biting. The virus cannot be transmitted from person-to-person. Though the nights are starting to get cooler and mosquito season is winding down, Godzik said mosquitoes are still around and precautions need to be taken such as:

avoiding outdoor activities between dusk and dawn if possible, since that is the time during which mosquitoes are most active;

wearing a long-sleeved shirt and long pants when it's necessary to be outside during times when mosquitoes are active;

using a mosquito repellent that contains DEET (the chemical N-Ndiethyl-metatoluamide), following label directions. DEET can be toxic if overused. Never use DEET on infants. Avoid using repellents

Town Meeting date set

A special fall town meeting will be held Oct. 23 at 7 p.m. at Cohasset High School. As stated in the town bylaws, residents have seven days to submit an article for inclusion on the meeting's warrant. The article must include 100 voters signatures.

New docks being built

Harbormaster John Winters reported to the Harbor Committee that the four new town docks are currently being built at the Hingham shipyard, and should be finished in the next couple of weeks.

New docks will be installed at Fisherman's Wharf, Margin Street, Lawrence Wharf and on Government Island. The Government Island dock will be 72 feet long and towed into the harbor by water.

According to Winters, the docks will be installed at the sites to see if they work and then will be taken back out for the winter.

Committee changes

Senior Housing committee member Jane Marsh announced her resignation from the committee. Selectmen voted at their meeting Tuesday night to name Libby Zotos to replace her.

Gordon Hislop gave his notice of resignation from the Cohasset Design Review Board. Selectmen are now looking for candidates to replace him.

Selectmen's meeting changed

The Board of Selectmen will meet next Monday, Sept. 18 at 7:30 p.m. rather than Tuesday, Sept. 19 due to the state primaries being held that night.

Correction

A story in the Aug. 31 Mariner incorrectly reported that there were eight custodians in the three Cohasset schools. There are six – three at the Middle/High School, two in the Osgood School, and one in the Deer Hill School.

Water commission improving service

The Water Commission has started replacing undersized pipes on Highland Avenue, Highland Court, and Robert Jason Road to improve water service there.

"After hearing multiple complaints from Highland Avenue residents of inadequate water service, we conducted fire flow tests," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "Since the fire flow tests confirmed that the area had inadequate water service, we had Tutela Engineering put together a plan for improving water service to this area. We are now implementing that plan, which will cost about $60,000."

This water main replacement program for this area includes: replacing 6-inch pipe on Robert Jason Road with 8-inch ductile iron pipe; replacing 6-inch asbestos concrete pipe on Highland Avenue (Jason Road to Highland Court) with 8-inch ductile iron pipe; replacing existing 1-inch pipe in Highland Court with 8-inch ductile iron pipe; replacing one existing fire hydrant on Highland Avenue; and adding two new fire hydrants on Highland Avenue and Highland Court.

"These pipe upgrades in the Highland Avenue area are just part of our ongoing water system improvement program to improve water service and fire protection," said McNabb. "This year we have also replaced undersized water pipes on King Street, Stevens Lane, Black Horse Lane, and part of Holly Lane to improve water service and fire protection."

EDUCATION

•Voted for renovations of Hingham schools with 61% state reimbursement.
•Coordinated introduction of the "student police academy," designed to break down barriers between students and authority figures.
•Maintained education as a top priority in each fiscal budget.

HEALTH CARE

•Instituted regulations and worked with local vendors to keep tobacco products out of the hands of children.
•Enhanced the role of Hingham's public health nurse to work with victims of domestic violence and elder abuse.
•Established a water resource task force to address growing demands on water supplies and environmental impacts of growth.

TAXES

•Obtained two bond rating improvements, earning the highest rating on the South Shore and realizing dramatic savings in municipal borrowings.
•Created a stabilization fund to return more than $1.5 million dollars to Hingham taxpayers.
•Expanded Hingham's tax relief program for seniors to provide more funding and to include non-seniors based on need.
•Supported legislation providing additional real estate tax relief to qualified seniors.

Full-time school psychologist a priority

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Without spending any more money, the school board believes it can expand services to all students with the addition of a school psychologist to the staff.

According to Steve Kaplan, the schools' new director of student services, a school psychologist could be hired with funds already allocated within the budget for outside testing and evaluation for special needs students.

"We're paying more than what amounts to a full-time salary for a dozen days of work when we can hire a full-time school psychologist for the whole year," said Kaplan.

Kaplan, whose duties include untangling the web of recent state special education mandates, said that by hiring a school psychologist with neurological training and a background in education, special needs students can be evaluated, for the most part, in-house.

"A school psychologist can contribute to the evaluation process, and the students can stay in Cohasset," he said.

School Supt. Dr. C v Edward Malvey said he approved of Kaplan's recommendation and will be acting on it. "We'd be reallocating the funds we already have, and getting more services," said Malvey.

Kaplan said hiring a full-time school psychologist, at a cost of about $50,000, would benefit the entire Cohasset student body.

"Preventative mental health is a serious part of the school curriculum. Every time you open the paper, there is another episode of violence (involving) children. There are things to look at preventatively, like profiles of violent kids," said Kaplan.

Kaplan said there has been a shift in special education statewide as the state has begun to pay for fewer and fewer services, forcing local communities to pick up the tab.

"By not outsourcing services, we can gain control over what we're doing from pre-school to high school," he said. Kaplan said that special needs children attending programs outside of Cohasset schools will not be affected.

School board member Mark DeGiacomo said the new position makes sense. "We're staying within the budget, all the kids get better services, and we can keep the evaluation process within Cohasset as much as possible," he said.

"I think it's hard for people to understand the cost jumps in special education. It helps if we could be on top of things as much as possible, and I think this is a step in that direction," he said.

Kaplan said students currently being evaluated offsite would continue to do so until the school psychologist is hired. Kaplan said he knows of qualified candidates for the new position.

Osgood has no crossing guard

The school board hopes to hire a permanent school crossing guard by adding the proposal to the list of articles for October's Annual Town Meeting.

According to Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, Osgood Elementary School students are without a crossing guard at Deer Hill because of budget reductions.

"We need coverage there, but it has put a strain on our budget,' he said at Thursday's school board meeting.

Malvey said adults from Osgood — from teachers to administrators to members of the custodial staff — have been covering as crossing guards, but a permanent guard is needed, at a cost about $8,000.

"It's not a good situation. We need some consistency there," he said.

Malvey said the police department, in the past, has covered the street, but police have said they cannot guarantee an officer every morning and afternoon.

"This is a long time coming," said Malvey. The Annual Town Meeting is scheduled for Oct. 23.

AROUND TOWN

HELLO EVERYONE

Well, the weather is doing it again, going against everything that it should be. As I am finishing this week's column, it is 84 degrees outside! This is wonderful although I am sure that all the children don't agree as they sit in school. Please remember(especially me), to slow down when driving and follow the rules of the road. Also, take the time if you can, to look around and see the colors that are so beautiful around town.

KEEP ON PLANTING

The wonderful letter that was given to me last week drew such a wonderful response from many townspeople. Joanne Lehr of North Main Street really said the words that I was feeling. Many of the flowers and gardens around town are the ones that we have all grown to look for at the beginning of summer and to watch and admire as the summer goes on. They are all made with love and hard work and give so many of us pleasure. Keep on planting and bringing us such beautiful sights. Thank you again to the wonderful man who wrote such a warm and heartfelt letter.

HATS OFF TO VOLUNTEERS

Speaking of how things look. If you were attending any of the sporting events held last week at the Middle High School here in town, you may have noticed how great the facility looked. Thank you to all of the parent volunteers, custodial crew and Ron Ford for organizing and implementing the weeding, planting and mulching that went on to make it look as it does. Many compliments were heard from people in the town as well as many out-of-town visitors.

WELCOME HOME PETER!

I had some great news emailed to me about a wonderful young man from our town. Peter Maitland of Forest Ave., who is the son of Ken and Heidi Maitland, recently returned from a home stay and summer camp experience in Finland! This trip was sponsored by his Dad's company, Kone Elevators. Peter spent 10 days in Finland, first with a host family in Hausjarvi, who have a "gentleman's farm" and bed-and-breakfast. Then, he and another 100 teens from Europe, Africa, North and South America, attended a camp with traditional camp activities and special sensitivity training activities. The teens also did some sightseeing in Helsinki. Peter has returned to his junior year, here at Cohasset High School. What an unbelievable experience, Peter. I am sure that you have many memories that will last you a lifetime.

CALLING ALL ARTISTS!!!!

Your help is needed by a person named Adrian Gottlieb. Adrian is a realists painter and grad student studying classical realist drawing and painting at the Florence Academy of Art, in Florence, Italy. Adrian helped to curate an exhibit at The Red Lion Inn in July and had some paintings for sale. At the time, a man from Cohasset had offered to purchase a painting of a Renaissance sculpture of an angel in prayer done in Italy. The painting is called "Veneration." Adrian is desperately looking for this man, whose name and phone number was not exchanged at the time. Adrian would like for you to know that your offer has been accepted and would help in Adrian's endeavor in Italy. If you are reading this and are still interested, please call Adrian at 1-(802)-879-1598 or email Adrian at ADGOT@yahoo.com or Egottlieb2@aol.com. Thank you in advance!

PETS ON PARADE

All Creatures Great and Small were out in full garb on Saturday at the First Annual Pet Parade held on the Town Common. This event was held to benefit the Community Center Playground refurbishment and thanks to Molly McGowan and her wonderful team, it was a HUGE success. Reverend Cutler got things started with a blessing for all the creatures and owners. This was followed by Joanne Lehr's Girl Scout Troup carrying umbrellas and two scouts carrying signs that read: "It's Raining Cats and Dogs" and "And I just stepped in a Poodle!" The wonderful "Rusty Skippers" were on hand to play some great marching tunes and lead everyone around the Common. There were dogs dressed in Hawaiian shirts on surfboards, a magician with a rabbit coming out of his hat, a wagon rigged up like a fishing boat with the Dog Captain wearing a sou'easter, Dorothy with her pet dog ToTo in a basket, a bike and its owner dressed for the ballet and on it went...with over 150 cats/dogs/kids and yes, even a Guinea Pig!!! Many children also rode their bikes and a great time was had by all. Area businesses were very generous and everyone went home with a prize. What a fantastic time, great job to all the organizers!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO YOU!

A few Happy Birthday wishes are being sent out. Tom Newhall and Paul Tedeschi both celebrated their birthdays last week. Hope that you guys had a great time and enjoyed your special days!

That's all for this week! Please make sure to send me all your wonderful news and upcoming events here around town. I can be reached several ways, by phone (781)383-1740, by email jenpiep@yahoo.com and by regular mail 622 CJC Highway. Hope you all have a great week! Jennifer Piepenbrink.

Legion clambake breaks all records

More than 400 people attended the American Legion Clambake on Cohasset's Sandy Beach this past Saturday doubling any prior year's attendance.

This annual event, sponsored by Cohasset's George H. Mealy Post of the American Legion, is in support of the legion's Christina Burke Scholarships given annually to worthy Cohasset High School graduating seniors seeking higher education.

Jack Burke, treasurer of the legion post and in whose daughter's memory the scholarships are named, said "For each of the past 10 years the George H. Mealy Post has awarded $7,000 in scholarships. With the success of this clambake, I am going to ask the membership to increase that amount to $10,000 starting with the graduating class 2001."

In addition to the lobster and steamed clam dinner, those attending were treated to the music of the Irish Volunteers and DJ Jay Fiori. A highlight of the event was everyone's chance to dunk local political candidates including candidates for state representative, Garrett Bradley and Mary Anne McKenna, in the dunk tank.

Burke credited Cohasset businessman Neil Murphy who chaired this year's clambake with the event's success. "Neil worked tirelessly, making certain that every detail was addressed and that every possible ticket was sold."

IT'S HAPPENING

Concert at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset presents its in-residence ensemble, the Huntington Chamber Brass in a concert Sunday, Sept. 24, at 3 p.m.

This group was founded in 1997 at The New England Conservatory in Boston, and has given many performances throughout the U.S. from Carnegie Hall in New York to dairy farms in the rural west. The group is also known for its year residency in Stephensville, Texas, providing workshops in "Performance Anxiety" and "Arts Management."

This brass quintet consists of Bron Wright, Mark Emery, Tom Cupples, Alberto Suarez and Randall Montgomery. The program will include a transcription of the Bach "Toccata" and "Fugue in D Minor," Handel's "Arrival of the Queen of Sheba," and works by Shostakovich, Sampson and Eric Ewazen.

With this program, St. Stephen's begins its 10th concert series season, well-known in the Boston and South Shore areas for its fine performers. Other programs for this season include Tatiana Tchausova of the St. Petersburg Conservatory in Russia; An Advent Service of Lessons and Carols; A Rheinberger Festival celebrating the music of this far too little known composer from Liechtenstein and organ recitals of Rosalind Mohnsen and G. Fredrick Guzasky.

Hear a playing of the church's 57-bell carillon before the concert. Following the performance, a reception will be held so guests may visit with the performers. A free-will offering will be taken.

The church, located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For information call 383-1083.

Bridge club starts

Cohasset Elder Affairs has announced a new duplicate bridge game opening at the Community Center in Cohasset. The Owl's Nest Bridge Clubs will be sponsoring the ACBL (American Contract Bridge League) sanctioned game every Monday.

Bridge and its competitive partner, duplicate bridge, are the world's most popular games and indeed the very same game, only the scoring system is different. Every Monday the game will begin at 12:30 sharp. Refreshments will be served just before the game begins and the doors will open in time for coffee. Partners are available for those who don't have a partner. The scoring will be stratified thereby giving every player a chance to earn his/her master's points at every level of play.

Club director Bill Wennerberg is certified by the ACBL and currently runs very successful games in Wareham and Duxbury. Bill is also an ACBL certified bridge teacher and he will be offering lessons for all interested players and non-players on the morning of game day.

For more information about any of the games or lessons please call the bridge club at 508-746-8715.

Town counsel allows private docking for yacht

Committee looks to 'tighten up' harbor bylaws

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Peter Roy's 75-foot cabin cruiser is able to be docked at his private pier, according to Cohasset Town Counsel Paul DeRensis.

DeRensis had been asked to review the matter by the Harbor Committee after residents questioned the legality of Roy mooring a boat that size in the harbor. Harbor regulations state that boats longer than 45 feet are not allowed to be moored in Cohasset Harbor.

However, because the boat is moored to Roy's private dock on his Margin Street property, the boat is outside the harbormaster's jurisdiction.

The ruling is the second one made on the matter. DeRensis ruled last month that the boat was legal, but at the committee's Aug. 22 meeting, committee member Jack Brister challenged the ruling in light of a recent state court decision that gave a conservation commission jurisdiction over a private dock.

However, DeRensis said in his latest decision that the court ruling gave jurisdiction to a conservation commission regarding an environmental concern matter.

Because Roy's pier had already been approved by Cohasset's conservation commission, and DeRensis was being asked to interpret the rule as it is written in the town bylaws, he said the court case is not applicable in this situation.

Because the pier is a town-approved private pier, it is not subject to the mooring restrictions that apply to the town moorings, and the slips at the Cohasset Yacht Club.

On the heels of this latest decision, the committee decided to ask town counsel to work with harbormaster John Winters in order to close some of the loopholes and clarify some of the regulations' language, according to committee chairman John Bertolami.

Though the board debated for nearly three hours Tuesday night, it ultimately decided to not recommend any specific areas for town counsel to look at. Instead it will recommend to selectmen that town counsel sit down and discuss any problematic areas with Winters.

Town delays action on unenforceable recycling bylaw

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen decided to hold off on implementing its new bylaw requiring private trash haulers to recycle, after a number of contractors complained that the regulations would create an unfair economic burden on them and be nearly impossible to enforce.

Town Meeting approved an article in March requiring "all persons who collect solid waste or other discarded materials for hire from residences, businesses, or any address in the Town of Cohasset shall be required to recycle all materials designated recyclable by vote of the Board of Selectmen." It also stated that the bylaw would not go into effect until selectmen voted to implement it.

At Tuesday's meeting, selectmen Merle Brown presented a set of proposed rules and regulations from the town's recycling committee. In order for a trash hauler to operate in the town, they must receive a license from selectmen. The permit can be rescinded if the hauler charged a separate rate to collect recyclable material. Haulers are also required to submit copies of the weight slips received after transporting the recyclable material to a transfer station.

However, by not being able to charge more for collecting recyclables, haulers say they will be forced to eat the additional costs that will come with the regulation.

According to Bill Sullivan, who attended the meeting representing Waste Management of Mass., Inc., said his company would have to buy additional truck, add personnel to staff that truck, and then have to pay for its long-term maintenance, without charging its customers any more.

With the market for recyclable materials fluctuating every month, Sullivan said his company normally bills its customers on a per month basis, with recyclable removable charges being a separate line item for normal trash removal.

Russell Field, proprietor of Russell Field and Son Inc., said the companies would also have trouble transporting the material and getting rid of it. "We could fill up the trucks three times," he said. "There is no place to dump it."

In addition, Field said, there is no way a private contractor could force its commercial customers to recycle. What all businesses do, for the most part he said, is just throw all of its trash – recyclables included – into its dumpster, and the hauler can't be required to sort everything out.

Brown was mostly unsympathetic

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Primary reasons

It's called a primary, but it has been known to be secondary to many voters.

A recent prediction by the Boston Globe estimated that voter turnout could approach an all-time low of 10 percent on Tuesday, Sept. 19. The state secretary of state doesn't offer much more encouragement: the office is estimating a 15 percent turnout.

Despite those predictions, however, the State Primary needs to be taken as seriously as the General Election in November. The candidates who are working for the opportunity to have their names on the ballot in November are certainly taking it seriously.

Here on the South Shore, there are several key races which are expected to bring out the voters. At least we can only hope so.

Democrats and Hingham residents Garrett Bradley and Mike Holden face off against each other for state representative. Jim Cantwell of Weymouth and Ted LeClair of Scituate are also running against each other to secure the Democratic nod for the state senate seat serving eight towns, including Cohasset and hingham.

Cantwell and LeClair squared off in a debate Monday night sponsored by Community Newspaper Company, owners of the Mariner Newspapers. Bradley and Holden had their turn in the spotlight last Thursday at the Cohasset Lightkeeper's Residence in a debate also sponsored by CNC.

Through the efforts of the Hingham League of Women Voters, the curator of the Historic Winslow House in Marshfield, WATD, folks at the Lightkeeper's Residence, and the candidates, voters were presented with forums to help them make an educated decision when they go to the polls on Tuesday.

The Hingham and State League of Women Voters were instrumental in helping to pull off the debates, taking care of many of the behind-the-scenes efforts, moderating the debates, fielding questions from the audience, and making sure candidates stuck to their allotted time to speak on an issue.

The area's League of Woman Voters chapters often go about their work quietly and mostly behind the scenes. What they do doesn't usually attract front-page attention, but their call to service in the name of democracy in action is laudable and was certainly appreciated the last two weeks.

So, too, were others who were involved in making the debates possible. So many little details go into assuring that fairness and equality prevail.

Regina Porter, curator of the Winslow House, had the historic building in great condition for the estimated 130 spectators, taking care of the finer details to provide a perfect setting to watch democracy in action.

The debates were broadcast live on WATD Monday night and can be seen on the community access channels in the days ahead, giving those who couldn't make it to the events a chance to hear the candidates.

We feel the efforts put forth by those listed above, including the candidates, give voters the information they need heading to the polls on Tuesday. Now it's up to the voters to do their part and prove the dismal turnout prediction wrong.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Positive role models

TO THE EDITOR:

Dear Chief Noonan:

The news today brought word that Massachusetts is nearly double the national average for young people ages 12 to 17 involved in illicit drug or alcohol dependence. We know from Cohasset's participation in the National Youth Risk Behavior Survey that our young people are at risk to the same degree as young people statewide. We also note dramatic increases in alcohol (25 to 59 percent) and marijuana (13 to 39 percent) use between the ages of 13 and 15 among children in Cohasset. All of this is prelude to conveying to you and your department the appreciation of the Drug and Alcohol Committee for the work you do in not just enforcing the law when it comes to drug and alcohol abuse but also for striving to promote the health and well being of our community.

Your department has been criticized for arresting young people for drug and alcohol violations. We live in a culture that expects peak performance, winning, being at the top of one's game and has little patience with mistakes. The pressure is enormous. Hence the anger at arrests. What would happen if we changed our attitude and used a failing as an opportunity for growth? Officer Matos imagined an arrest could be a time of acknowledgement of a mistake, a time to express disappointment, yes, but also love, and the commitment on the part of parents and young people to work through it together, hard as that may be. Clearly to do so is the opportunity for growth.

We are engaged in a partnership, parents and children, police and schools, government and places of worship, to work to change social attitudes about drugs but also about what we expect of ourselves and others. None of us has arrived at perfection, we are all still and always growing. Together we try to make that growth as helpful and healthy as we can. The role of you and your department is a positive one.

The Reverend Clifford Cutler
Chair, The Drug and Alcohol Committee

(Editor's note: The Drug and Alcohol Committee provided the Mariner with a copy of this letter.)

Tell us what you think!

The Mariner welcomes for publication signed letters to the editor that include the writer's address and, for verification purposes only, a phone number. Unsigned letters and letters with names withheld by request or pen names will not be printed. Letters should be no more then 600 words. Send your letters to: Cohasset News, 3 Brook St. or send by fax to 741-2931.. Deadline for all letters in noon on the Friday prior to publication date.

PSO did outstanding job

TO THE EDITOR:

Please join me in saying thank you and congratulations to Susan Biddle Jaffe, Sally Sisson Game, Vicky Neaves, Beth Seraikas and Derry Schwantner for the "totally awesome" job they did on the PSO Calendar this year!

Those of you who have had a chance to see it and use it will recognize the creativity and hard work that went into making it an even more indispensable tool for everyone in Cohasset.

Needless to say, these women spent hours of their own time re-thinking and re-vamping the calendar over the summer. The end product is clearly a tribute to their efforts.

The willingness to devote time, effort and talent to a project such as this is shared by countless other parents in the Cohasset school system. It is the dedication of all these parents that makes Cohasset such a special place for children to learn and grow.

Jane Pescatore
President, Cohasset PSO

Restore Greenbush line

TO THE EDITOR:

DEAR GOVERNOR CELLUCCI:

Although in writing to you it may be like preaching to the converted, I want, as a supporter of the restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line, to put in a strong positive position on this matter in advance of the forthcoming meeting with officials of several South Shore towns with you and others Sept. 19.

It is clear from advance statements by many of these officials that you will be hearing only the negatives on the project. The vocal few, led mostly by those who now live close to the railbed, have managed to make it appear that there is widespread opposition, when I believe the fact of the matter is that a substantial majority of area residents remain convinced that it will be a welcome addition to transportation in the area ...and without harmful effects. As recently as last December, a responsible survey showed that 80 percent of South Shore commuters and 78 percent of southeast commuters favor restoration.

Unfortunately it is difficult in these times of protest fever to organize favorable expression of opinion, but I hope you and the others at the meeting realize the narrowness of the noisy opposition.

Please do not be deluded by the representations by the town officials. Everywhere that commuter rail operates, including recent restorations south of Boston, it is a great success.

Residents owed an apology

TO THE EDITOR:

Is Cohasset being run by the Board of Selectmen or the Democratic Town Committee?

The advertisement endorsing Garrett Bradley in last week's Mariner is probably not illegal but it certainly appears to be unethical. That a governing board, representing the citizens of Cohasset would use their office in such a partisan manner is cause for concern and I believe they owe their constituents an explanation. I know I'd like to hear one.

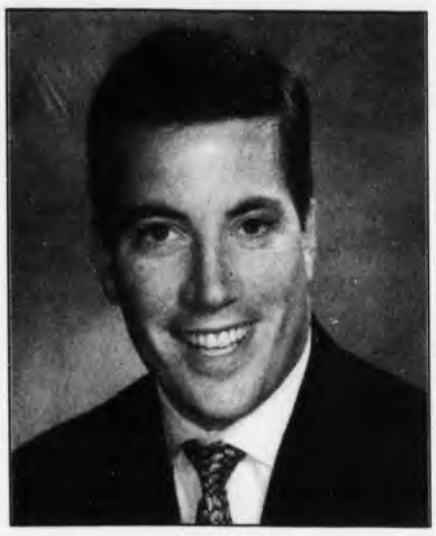
CANDIDATES CORNER



Mike Holden

Holden applauds Naval Air decision

State representative candidate Mike Holden has applauded Weymouth Mayor David Madden on his decision to oppose the redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station as proposed.

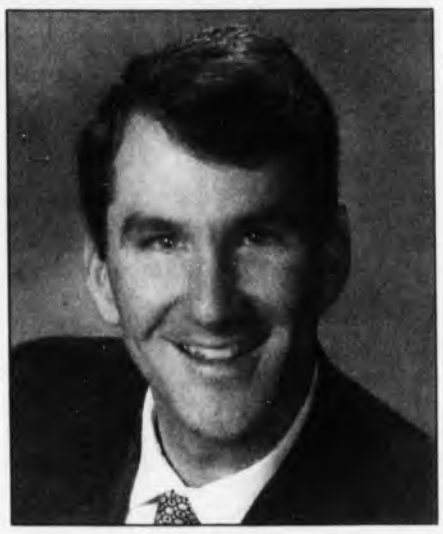
Holden and Madden both spoke at MassHighway's public hearing earlier this year in Rockland. Holden criticized the proposal based on the dramatic negative impacts that it would have on the region. Madden followed Holden's remarks with an argument in support of the proposal. Despite their prior differences on the issue, Holden said Madden is to be congratulated on his willingness to revisit the issue.

"It's a very difficult process," Holden said. "I remember that people were very frustrated when I was attending MassHighway hearings and meetings with every party interested in or concerned about this proposal. Residents were anxious for me to come out against it. By waiting until MassHighway laid out all of its data, I was a very credible critic of the proposal when it came time to take a stand at public hearings. It certainly would have been politically expedient to simply come out against the proposal when residents first expressed their opposition, but the people who need to be persuaded would have recognized such a stance as nothing more than the convenient political ploy it would have been."

"There's a significant difference between government and politics. Effective government requires some careful analysis, credibility and a willingness to take a stand. Politics simply requires choosing the side with the votes," he added.

plan said, "The Mayor has made a deliberate thoughtful and just decision. I look forward to working with him to advance a sound reuse plan that will truly benefit and enhance the quality of life for Weymouth and the regions residents."

The Tri Town Authority made up of representatives from Weymouth, Abington, and Rockland recently signed a purchase and sales agreement with Mills. This agreement is not final yet because it has a six-month review period clause which would allow either side to back out of the agreement.



Jim Cantwell

Cantwell endorsed by Clean Water Action

Jim Cantwell, candidate for State Senator, was endorsed recently by Clean Water Action, a national environmental advocacy group, at a press conference held at the North River Park Scenic Overlook in Scituate.

"Jim Cantwell has the strongest environmental credentials of the candidates for State Senator," said John McNabb of Clean Water Action. "Jim will be a strong environmental leader on Beacon Hill, since he has the depth of experience and commitment to environmental protection which will ensure that the residents of the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate District will have a strong environmental defender by electing him as their State Senator."

"Jim Cantwell knows that protecting the environment is the foundation necessary to enhance the quality of our lives and the lives of future generations," said Mary Lampert of Duxbury, Director of Massachusetts Citizen's for Safe Energy and a Board member of Clean Water Action. "He understands that a healthy environment not only ensures that our drinking water, food and air will be safe and that our coastal water will be clean, but that a healthy environment protects the health of our children and supports a healthy economy."

"Clean Water Action has endorsed Cantwell because his concerns and goals match those of Clean Water Action and the interests of the District for natural resources, historic preservation, and pollution prevention," said McNabb.

Cantwell is a candidate for State Senate in the Sept. 19 Democratic Primary in the Plymouth-Norfolk District, which includes the towns of Weymouth, Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and part of Braintree.

Clean Water Action is a national citizens' organization working for clean, safe and affordable water, prevention of health-threatening pollution, re creation of environmentally-safe jobs and businesses, and empowerment of people to make democracy work. Clean Water Action organizes strong grassroots groups, coalitions and campaigns to protect our environment, health, economic well-being and community quality of life.

Hedlund and Madden join forces against the Megamall

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said he welcomes the recent decision by Weymouth Mayor David Madden who announced his plans to oppose the so-called Mills Megamall plan for the Weymouth Naval Air Station site.

"I have been opposed to the mall component of the reuse plan for the past year due to the adverse impact the estimated traffic counts will have upon our neighborhoods" said Hedlund.

Hedlund, who was the first elected official representing Weymouth to announce his opposition to the State Sen. Robert Hedlund

Garrett Bradley

Bradley knocks on 9,500 doors

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley spent most of the summer bringing his door knocking milestone to 9,500 doors throughout the 3rd Plymouth District.

With only a few days remaining before the Sept. 19 Primary, Bradley said he is excited by the response he has received from voters. "People have been very responsive to my door knocking, volunteer efforts, and our positive campaign message," stated Bradley.

Bradley said he has utilized the door-to-door contact to discuss important issues with voters. "I am committed to talking to the voters directly about issues such as education, healthcare and our quality of life," stated Bradley. "I want to provide voters with access to me and my positions on the issues that are important to them. This hands-on style of representation will continue if I am elected to the House of Representatives."

The Kiss and The Expletive

Well, I guess it's all over now. The election, I mean. It's all over and Algore has won. I deduce this because the two most critical issues of the campaign have come and gone in the past couple of weeks and the Democratic candidate for leader of the free world has clearly come out on top.

No, the issues had nothing to do with education (they're both for it), health insurance (they're for that, too) or the possibility of war with Red China (they're both agin it).

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I'm talking about The Kiss and The Expletive that was deleted — everywhere but in the pages of the Boston Globe and the New York Times.

The Kiss was planted by Algore full on the lips of his wife, Tipper, on stage at the Democratic National Convention as a reward for her telling the delegates what a great guy he is and how he takes the garbage out every night.

Of course, a husband who is running for president and the wife who stands by her man can't just go around kissing in public without the analysts choosing up sides and exploring the political implications of the act.

One faction was of the opinion that the kiss was a genuine show of affection. The other side held that the whole scenario was carefully scripted to show that Algore was a real man, or an "alpha male," as his advisors would have it.

In my view, judging from the intense body language displayed by the participants, The Kiss was so spontaneous that, if there was a couch handy and they weren't being watched live by several thousand people and millions more on C-Span, they would have . . . but let us not intrude.

Whatever, a poll taken shortly after The Kiss showed that Algore's favorability rating had shot up with women to Clintonesque proportions.

It is an inexplicable fact that, every time he cavorted with another floozy, Bill Clinton's popularity increased among the sisters. Go figure!

But I digress . . .

The Expletive was delivered by George W. as an aside to his running mate, Dick Cheney.

Unfortunately, the public address system was still on and half the population of Napierville, Ill., heard what George W. thought of a reporter who had written several articles he deemed unfair.

"There's Adam Clymer, major league (expletive) from the New York Times," he said while smiling and waving to the crowd.

"That'll cost him the newsroom vote," cracked one wag. That's two votes by my reckoning, if I know newsrooms.

George W. used a word I had never heard before so I had to go to the dictionary to look it up and I tell you I was shocked, repeat shocked, by what I saw.

It was a word that is rarely heard in public — except when kids get together on school playgrounds and little old ladies with blue hair gather at tea parties.

But important issues like that can thwart a candidate's chances for election — or at least cause the appointment of an independent prosecutor to see what else of importance he's hiding in his closet.

Wasn't it in his 1972 campaign against Dick Nixon that candidate George McGovern told a heckler to kiss an unmentionable part of his anatomy?

And look what happened to him.

Extinction is forever — only stories remain

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

"Extinct" birds no longer exist. "Endangered" birds are in danger of becoming extinct, and "Threatened" birds are likely to become endangered soon, according to the Endangered Species Act (ESA). The National Audubon Society publishes a "Watch List" of birds they feel may be in some danger and in need of watching. It is not always easy to determine when a species is really extinct. Is there still a Bachman's Warbler hiding in hard-to-penetrate swampy woods of the southeastern US? Was the reported sighting of an Ivory-billed Woodpecker in Louisiana truly an ivory-billed, or just the more common pileated?

Population numbers vary naturally from year to year, and many individuals die off from any one of a number of causes each year. It is only when, year after year, the reproductive success of a species is not great enough to make up for these losses that a species becomes endangered and finally extinct. The capacity for replacing loss rather than any specific low total number of individuals determines the health of a species. An animal can be endangered in some locations and not at all threatened in other areas. The Bald Eagle has always been more plentiful in Alaska than elsewhere. It has recently returned to nest in the Quabbin Reservoir area.

Today, it is easy to blame humans for all extinction problems. In fact, some of the least fit species simply do not survive. The concern, however, is that expanding human populations and their activities are accelerating rates of extinction with alarming speed. Predation, disease, over-hunting, destruction of habitat, low food supplies, pollution, pesticide use, bad weather and natural disasters are all factors contributing to the loss of birds.

Small or slow environmental changes may allow time for evolutionary adaptations, but large catastrophic events can lead to quick extinction for species already on the edge. Birds living on islands, birds congregating in large flocks, and birds with specialized food or habitat needs are all particularly vulnerable to such things as oil spills, introduced predators, or major storms.

American lifestyles in the 19th century helped to decimate and extirpate some bird populations within a surprisingly short time. Collecting eggs was a popular and lucrative sport. The best collections contained the most species, the rarer the better. Ladies wore hats lavishly decorated with bird feathers or even whole birds. Up to 20 million birds a year were sacrificed to support the millinery trade. Birds of all varieties were considered good eating. Over-hunting was the culprit then, perhaps the way over-fishing is a problem today.

Finally about the beginning of the 20th century, attitudes began to change, and people began to realize that birds did not exist in unlimited supply. Harriet Hemenway and her Boston Brahmin lady friends loudly protested killing birds for feathers. Out of this, the Massachusetts Audubon Society was born. Check out the children's book, "She's Wearing a Dead Bird on Her Head," by Kathryn Lasky. In 1918 the Migratory Bird Treaty was enacted between the United States and Great Britain. This limited hunting and made the taking of nests and eggs illegal. Similar treaties were later signed with other countries. The Bald Eagle Protection Act was passed in 1940. The federal ban on DDT in 1972 came about in large part due to Rachel Carson's book, "Silent Spring." The ESA became law in 1973.

Population numbers vary naturally from year to year, and many individuals die off from any one of a number of causes each year. It is only when, year after year, the reproductive success of a species is not great enough to make up for these losses that a species becomes endangered and finally extinct.

Protection by law has helped, but management of wildlife is also necessary to offset the damage done by humans to the environment. It is the responsibility of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to come up with recovery plans for birds listed under the ESA. Federal restrictions on DDT and other pesticides, plus successful captive breeding programs for the once nearly extinct Peregrine Falcon resulted in its de-listing in August of 1999. Establishment of bluebird trails has helped bring back the Eastern Bluebird. Building of nesting platforms for Osprey has been very successful. The American Bird Conservancy and Partners in Flight are dedicated to conservation of wild birds and their habitats.

Stephen Kress pioneered seabird restoration by transporting baby Atlantic Puffins from Newfoundland to Eastern Egg Rock in Maine. Eight years later, the first of these puffins began nesting on Eastern Egg Rock. This is a fascinating story told in his book, "Project Puffin: How We Brought Puffins Back to Egg Rock," written for children, but equally interesting to adults. As director of the Seabird Restoration Programme, he has adapted his methods to help restore colonies of other seabirds all around the world.

When a species becomes extinct, it is gone forever. Or is it possible that some lost species will someday be cloned back to life? Researchers have been working with cloned DNA from extinct species since 1984. According to the most recent issue of "Bird Watcher's Digest", high school students in New Zealand are proposing that cloning be tried with the Huia, an extinct species of wattlebird on their school logo. While the scientists and ethicists sort out whether this is either possible or desirable, I would like to suggest two recently published books. The first is "Last of the Curlews" by Fred Bodsworth. This is a republication of a story written in 1955 about the imagined life of the last surviving Eskimo Curlew. It is a charming book.

The other book is "Hope is the Thing with Feathers" by Christopher Cokinos. He details the stories of six extinct North American birds, having thoroughly researched their history, both natural and otherwise. The Great Auk, a penguin-like bird, was flightless, good to eat, and too easy to kill when on land to breed. The exotically colored Carolina Parakeet was probably done in by loss of habitat and competition for roosting and nesting sites with the insect known as the European honeybee. Passenger Pigeons flying in flocks numbering in the millions made them easy targets for hunters. The Labrador Duck had a specialized bill and therefore, probably a specialized diet. It was not very good to eat, but was shot anyway. Cokinos succeeds in bringing these birds to life in our imaginations. Mental pictures of what has been lost should increase our resolve to continue the progress we have made in saving birds and habitat for future generations.

Village workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) is sponsoring a community workshop to discuss infrastructure improvement ideas for Cohasset Village on Thursday, Sept. 14, at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset High School auditorium.

The CRC and the town of Cohasset jointly hired the Cecil Group, a Boston-based landscape architectural firm, to undertake an infrastructure improvement study for the village. The Cecil Group has partnered with the BSC Group engineering firm to develop proposals for such items as improved parking, new sidewalks, enhanced pedestrian and vehicle circulation, additional greenspace, increased signage, and the removal of overhead utility lines.

The CRC urges all interested community members to attend and share their thoughts and ideas on present conditions in the village, as well as improvement ideas for the future. Whether you have specific suggestions, want the village to remain the same, or would like to have a better understanding of the revitalization program, the CRC welcomes your participation.

For more information on this public forum, or the revitalization program, call 383-2449, or stop by the CRC office located at 87 Elm St.

Author to speak at Glastonbury Abbey

The Rev. Timothy J. Joyce, author of "Celtic Christianity" and "The Spirituality of the Celtic Saints," will speak about his newest book, "Celtic Quest, A Healing Journey for Irish Catholics," at 11 a.m. Sunday, Sept. 17, at Glastonbury Abbey Chapel, 16 Hull St., Hingham.

Joyce will autograph his book following the talk.

A packed audience listens intently to the candidates. The event was sponsored by the Hingham Journal and Cohasset Mariner in cooperation with WATD radio and with the help of the Hingham League of Women Voters.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Garrett Bradley, left, speaks of his community service and involvement in Hingham activities as providing him with the knowledge to represent the district. Hingham attorney Mike Holden, right, says his experience on town boards qualifies him to hold the Beacon Hill office.

Bradley and Holden make their voices heard

But Holden said the money should be used for health related programs. "The tobacco settlement funds should be spent on health care issues, such as helping seniors afford prescription drugs," he said.

Bradley said he would instead support the Hemz/Hope Plan which would, according to Bradley, include income based premiums for prescription costs and actually cost the state less money.

Nearly two dozen questions were asked of Holden and Bradley by either the three panelists, or by voters in attendance, but perhaps the most listened to question asked the candidates to differentiate themselves from their opponent, and explain why they think they would be the best man for the job.

"It may be selfish, or my ego, but I don't think there is anyone better than me to make sure my kids have what it is they need, and what the state should provide," said Holden, a father of five, and former chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen. "I do believe I've made a difference by getting up, taking a stand, advocating a position and occasionally taking a beating...and that's what I'm prepared to do."

Bradley said though he doesn't have any experience as an elected official, he still believes he has the necessary experience to be a state representative.

"I deeply care about this area and issues affecting it such as education, health care and tax relief and I want to be a strong voice for it up in the Statehouse," said Bradley, a lifelong Hingham resident. "We both have different backgrounds and both have different experiences. My experience is in the community...I've been in the district, working as a prosecutor, volunteering as a youth football coach, I've rolled up my sleeves and worked on the access road [issue], worked to build a playground, talked to seniors about fraud protection.

"I have the experience that matters in the race and that's the difference."

Both candidates said they are against restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line, saying the project's benefits don't outweigh its negative impacts. Holden also made it a point throughout the night to make it clear that Hingham signed its controversial mitigation agreement after he left office.

Both were also against the use of the MCAS test as the single criteria to base whether a student can graduate from high school; the building of the access road for ther former South Weymouth Naval Air Station in the Farm Hills neighborhood of Hingham; the proposed new Logan Airport runway; and the reinstitution of the death penalty.

The debate, moderated by the Hingham League of Women Voters, also had many notable moments of humor.

Wigmore Pierson, one of the panelists and a well-known Republican in Cohasset, grilled Holden and Bradley on tax cuts. He characterized the candidates as "good, classic Democrats who never saw a tax you didn't like on the American people." Holden and Bradley are both against Question 4 on the state ballot which would lower the income tax in the state to 5 percent, saying the state has too many other commitments to tend to and can't afford the reduction in revenues. When both candidates said they support Question 7 that establishes a deduction for charitable contributions, Pierson said, "Praise the Lord."

He continued to needle Holden and Bradley and asked them to name any programs they were willing to cut. Holden, unable to resist returning the jab, asked Pierson "What's your favorite program?"

Holden initially tried to "differentiate himself from Bradley by saying "I'm about and inch and a half taller."

"But I'm younger," responded Bradley, 31, four years Holden's junior.

Though civility ruled for most of the quick-paced, and rather cerebral debate — with both candidates saying they will be in the winner's corner the day after the primary — a couple of rubber-tipped darts were thrown toward the end, especially by Holden.

"The question we're asking you [the voters] to decide is, who is better prepared to further the issues, and what has been done to further those issues up to now," said Holden in his closing statement. "Has it been an investment in the community, or an investment in a campaign; whether we've been invested in the community prior to our campaign, or been engaging in election year philanthropy."

Bradley pointed out in his closing statement that out of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset's 13 elected selectmen, he has received support from eight of them, with the other five not supporting anybody. "They feel as I hope you will that I have the experience that matters in this race."

Afterwards, both candidates expressed their pleasure at not only the format of the debate itself, but also the varying subjects of the questions.

Bradley said though he never thinks he does a good enough job in debates, he hoped voters were able to understand where he stood on the various issues. Holden said he was pleased with his performance at articulating his beliefs. "We need someone with experience and willingness to take a stand and that's where my opposition and I differ significantly and I think I was able to make that point."

turnout are false. "We're trying to attract more folks, and trying to remind folks how important the issues are we're facing at the State House."

Also on the Democratic ballot is incumbent U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, incumbent U.S. Rep. William D. Delahunt, and incumbent Governor's Councilor Christopher Iannella. In the state senate race, James Cantwell of Weymouth squares off against Ted LeClair of Marshfield.

County races for Hingham, which is in Plymouth County, include Francis Powers of Scituate, for Clerk of Courts; either John Buckley, Jr. of Brockton and Michael Linehan of Plymouth, for Register of Deeds; Troy Garron of Halifax, Joseph McDonough of Scituate, and Michael Stefani of Plymouth, for Sheriff. In the race of County Commissioner, voters are able to vote for two candidates. Commissioner candidates are Peter Asiaf, Jr. of Brockton, Albert Cavanagh of Hanover, Dennis Gallagher of Bridgewater, Richard Kenney of Kingston, John Patrick Riordan of Plymouth, Bridget Simmons of Plymouth, and Timothy White of Hingham.

On the Republican ballot, Jack E. Robinson is running unopposed for the U.S. Senator nomination, as is Eric Bleicken of Yarmouth who is running for Congress, Robert Hedlund of Weymouth for state senator, Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham for state representative, Anne Hummel of Kingston for Register of Deeds and Charles Decas of Wareham for Sheriff. R. Andrew Burbine of Abington, Russell McGilvray of Plymouth and Lawrence Novak of Brockton face off for the Register of Probate nomination. Voters are able to vote for both John Cafferty of Hingham and William Sims of Plymouth for County Commissioner. No one is running for the Governor's Council or Clerk of Courts.

In Cohasset – in Norfolk County — on the Democratic ballot, Walter Timilty of Milton, is running unopposed for clerk of courts, Peter Collins of Milton, Mary Ellen Cronin of Quincy, and Paul Harold of Quincy are vying for register of deeds. Voters can vote for both John Gillis of Quincy, and William O'Donnell of Norwood.

On the Republican ballot, Daniel Dewey of Quincy is running unopposed for clerk of courts, as is Bruce Olsen of Stoughton who is running for register of deeds. No one is running for county commissioner.

Carla Howell is running for the U.S. Senate nomination from the Libertarian Party.

Town delays action on bylaw to the haulers' plight saying the regulations wouldn't place an "impossible burden" on haulers and said "there's no reason why they can't learn to recycle."

He also said the reason haulers can't charge a separate fee to recycle is that residents wouldn't recycle, and instead just "throw it all together in one bag."

But the haulers found help in selectmen Michael Sullivan who agreed that the proposed regulations would place any unfair "onus" on the haulers. "There's no to get the constituency to recycle," he said.

"We're forcing him to double the costs," added selectmen Ronnie McMorris.

Board chairman Thomas Callahan said the regulations would require the haulers to just "provide a means to recycle," and then "just pick it up," and wouldn't force them to pick through customers garbage separating the refuse, nor deny service to someone who didn't recycle.

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik also had a problem with the regulations. "[There is a state law] that says no person shall transport trash without a license from the Board of Health. We'd have to give them a license as well in order to fulfill the statutory requirements," he pointed.

Brown was asked to take the proposed regulations back to the recycling committee and work out some of the bugs, before the board would vote to enact the bylaw.

Candidates square off in primary debate answered questions by a three-member panel of journalists. Gregory Mathis, CNC's Marshfield managing editor, Alice Coyle, CNC Scituate Mariner editor, and Aaron Katersky, WATD news director.

Cantwell and LeClair have similar positions on the major issues.

Continuing the work of education reform: both are for it.

However, both also feel that the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test has strayed from its original purpose and needs to be modified.

"The MCAS is not working," Cantwell said. "What we are left with is one high-stakes exam. It was supposed to be a comprehensive review. Teachers are having to gear the whole curriculum to taking one test."

"MCAS should not be the be-all and end-all," LeClair agreed. "MCAS is just a political football."

Teacher testing: both opposed.

Greenbush: for it, as long as effective mitigation takes place.

"I do support Greenbush, with great reservations," LeClair said, noting that 40 to 50 percent of the people he has approached in the district want the 17.7-mile rail line restored.

"This silent majority supports Greenbush and needs to be heard," LeClair said. "But safety issues need to be dealt with."

"The question is who will do the most effective job protecting people," Cantwell said. "I'll make sure we get the mitigation we deserve."

Both candidates also favor encouraging the development of other transportation alternatives to get cars off the roadways.

Health care: for it.

"I'll fight to expand patient rights legislation and reform our HMO system," Cantwell said.

"We need a state senator to take on the HMO lobbyists. Medical decisions must only be made by doctors and patients, not by insurance company billing departments," LeClair said.

Mills mall proposed for the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station: against it.

Access road and naval air station reuse plan: four thumbs up.

Assault weapons: against them.

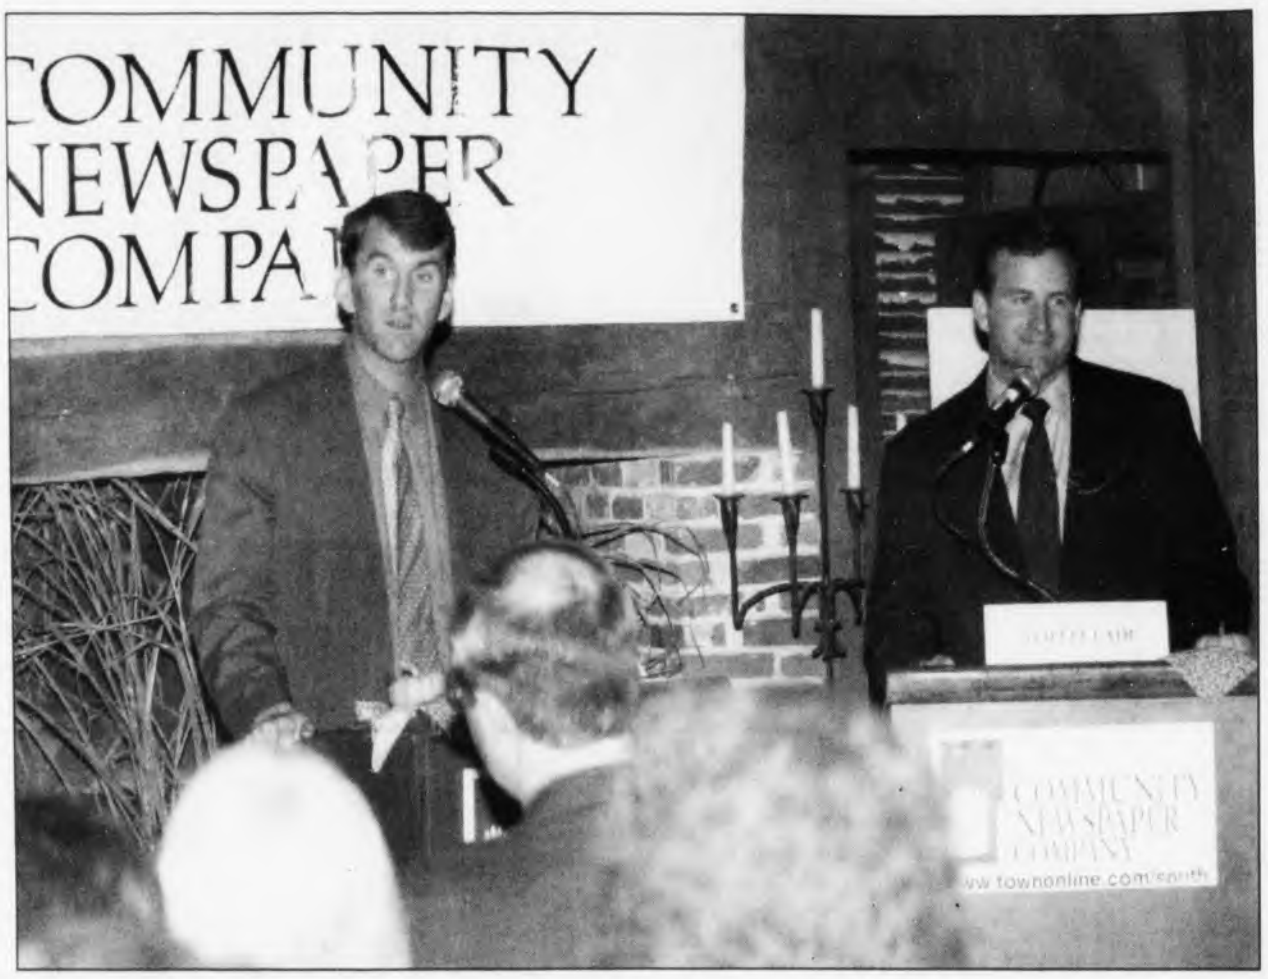
Ballot question 6 rolling back the state income tax, supported by Hedlund: Against the referendum question as going too far. Both favor a tax cut tied to the economy.

"The biggest difference is my 17 years of public service as an assistant district attorney, selectman, legislative aide and congressional aide. I know from experience what it takes to tackle health care reform, what it takes to keep quality in education, and how to address growth issues."
James Cantwell

The closest thing to a personal attack between the two Democrats was when LeClair stressed that Cantwell is a newcomer to Weymouth, which makes up 40 percent of the district. Earlier in the campaign LeClair had suggested Cantwell's signs done in maroon and gold, Weymouth's town colors, suggest he is a Weymouth townie.

Cantwell responded that maroon and gold are also the colors of Boston College High School and Boston College Law School, both of which he graduated from. Cantwell said he also had used the color scheme during his successful campaign for Marshfield selectman.

What emerged was a difference in emphasis and a difference in what type of representation will best serve the seven-town Plymouth-Norfolk Senate District made up of coastal communities Weymouth, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Marshfield, and Braintree. A portion of Braintree is in the district.



STAFF PHOTO/SUSAN HANEY

Cantwell, an environmental attorney, said his skills as a lawyer and as a former district attorney will better equip him to fight citizens' battles on Beacon Hill.

"The biggest difference is my 17 years of public service as an assistant district attorney, selectman, legislative aide and congressional aide. I know from experience what it takes to tackle health care reform, what it takes to keep quality in education, and how to address growth issues," Cantwell said.

LeClair, a former naval officer who is currently part owner of a cranberry business, said lawyers are wonderful people but overly represented at the Statehouse.

"There's nothing wrong with being a lawyer, but today half of the state Senate is made up of lawyers. I share the belief of many people that we need a state Senate with a broader perspective. We need a state senator who will speak up for us," LeClair said.

Both say they will preserve their ideals in the face of opposition.

The debate drew both residents who said this was the first political event attend and those politically active.

Weymouth School Committee Chairman Susan Peters, who praised LeClair's position on education, said she was very pleased to hear that education was a priority for both candidates and both spoke out for MCAS reform.

"Clearly we need a benchmark, but one test does not tell the whole story for anyone," Peters said.

Bob and Peg MacKenzie of Weymouth, Cantwell supporters, were in the audience.

Peg MacKenzie has praised Cantwell for his "tremendous record of achievement, working on issues important to Weymouth for 16 years," and had kudos for both candidates.

"Both have run a great campaign and have been very good to each other," MacKenzie said. "We're very interested in who is going to beat Bob Hedlund."

While Hedlund was not on hand for the debate between the two Democrats aspiring to oppose him in the general election, the issues raised during Monday night's debate will surely be hotly debated in the 48 days between the primary election and the deciding election on Nov. 7.

Skippers roll in opener

Bolster and Krupczak lead way past Bishops

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Skippers kicked off the 2000 football season with a bang, outscoring Arch Bishop Williams 18-6 in the second half en route to a 24-13 victory.

The Bishops opened the second quarter with a 90-yard touchdown drive, controlling the line of scrimmage on nearly every play.

"Those were first game jitters," said Head Coach Tony Rolfe. "Everybody just had to settle down."

The Skippers did just that, as both the offensive line and defensive line stood strong for the remainder of the half.

Junior Nick Bolster began the scoring for Cohasset with a 60-yard punt return for a touchdown. Bolster's tremendous game also included three interceptions, one returned for a touchdown, a fumble recovery and two punts that were downed inside the 10 yard line.

"He has gotten to be twice as good as we expected him to be," praised Rolfe, clearly impressed with Bolster's play on special teams, as well as on offense and defense. "That [game] was the best special teams we have had in Cohasset since I have been here."

After a failed two point conversion, the Skippers went into halftime trailing 7-6. During the break, Rolfe met with his team in the locker room, and the team came out with new fire in their eyes, pumping up the crowd.

"[Krupczak's performance] was no surprise. We expected that of him."
Cohasset head football coach Tony Rolfe

"We made some adjustments," said Rolfe of his halftime speech. "Going into the game, we had a very slim idea of what they were going to do."

Those adjustments proved effective to start the half, as the defense held srong to force a three and out.

Then, on first down and five after an illegal procedure penalty against Williams, senior captain Brian Krupczak burst through a gaping hole the offensive line had created for him, and did not stop until he crossed the goal line 62 yards down-

Boys even up record with impressive win

Skippers flash real signs under new coach in win over Norton

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Prior to Cohasset High's 3-0 loss to South Shore League juggernaut Hanover, Skippers head coach Dave Nigro had worked primarily on ball possession with his squad. Soon after, the first-year Cohasset coach stressed both the importance of possession and a relentless offensive attack

The results made an immediate impact with his highly receptive Skipper squad as they registered their first win of the season with Tuesday afternoon's convincing 4-2 decision over visiting Norton High.

The win evened Cohasset's record at 1-1 on the season, but more importantly, got the Skippers off on the right foot for five consecutive home games before a string of seven games away from the friendly confines of Alumni Field.

"It was a huge win," said Nigro. "It was a lift for the kids. Now we have to make some noise at home."

The final score didn't properly illustrated just much Cohasset dominated the Lancers in all phases of the game. With four Skipper shots hitting the post, Cohasset could have had as many as seven or eight goals with its prime scoring chances. The Skippers played well in their own end, at mid-field and they attacked the Norton net relentlessly throughout.

Cohasset took the early lead four minutes into the game when Robert Hickey's shot found the back of the Norton net for a 1-0 advantage. The Lancers knotted the game at one soon after, but Tim Baird drilled his first two goals of the season with a pair of second-half tallies to clinch the SSL contest for Cohasset.

"It was a huge win. It was a lift for the kids. Now we have to make some noise at home."
Cohasset boys soccer coach Dave Nigro

Nigro couldn't have asked more from the Skippers in this one. Matt Bilodeau and co-captain Doug O'Brien dominated play at mid field while fellow co-captain Erik Shea and Heath Heinz frustrated Norton in the Cohasset end with their defense.

"We played very well, possession-wise," said Nigro. "It's going to take a little bit of time. Overall, I was happy. They're very eager to learn."

Nigro said he is working on selling his coaching philosophy of ball possession to his players. So far, his method has been an easy sell for his Cohasset players. They realize it's a method that sells itself.

"The biggest thing for me is that the kids have been responsive to what I'm trying to teach them," said Nigro. "If we can out-possess the other team we will control the game."

It's a simple philosophy that Nigro coaches by but it's one of the most basic in all of sports. He believes his team has the skill to carry it out in a tough league. Norton was just the first team to experience the execution of Nigro's coaching beliefs.

"Norton's supposed to be one of the more powerful teams," he said.

The one concern Nigro has is keeping his team healthy for the long haul of 20 tough games. He is confident that no team in the SSL can cruise through its schedule. Nigro shudders to think what could happen to Cohasset if one or two players go down with injuries. It's a fear most every coach has lurking in the back of his mind.

"I don't think there's anybody you're going to walk over," said Nigro. "There are so many games in a row, if someone goes down for two weeks they could miss four games."

Cohasset's next big test comes Friday against a very strong Norwell High team at home (3:30 p.m.). The Skippers will try to package the confidence gained from their win over Norton and feed off of it against the Clippers. Norwell shouldn't expect a team willing to just control the ball. The Clippers must prepare for an all-out attack from the Skippers. Failure to do so could prove to be dangerous.

Could this be 'the year?'

by David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With eleven seniors, all starters for this year's varsity field hockey team, the Lady Skippers certainly appear to be one of the top powerhouses in the league. They demonstrated that Monday afternoon, crushing the Sachems of Middleboro, 6-0, in the first game of the season.

Leading the way were two of Cohasset's All-Stars from last year: senior captain Andi Shaughnessy had two goals and an assist, while senior Maggie O'Connor connected for a goal and two assists.

Seniors Kelly Lordan and Morgan Hurley, and sophomore Heather Peraino, playing her first varsity game, all scored, and senior Ashley Ulmer recorded an assist.

Senior goalie Krysten Considine also came up big, recording the shutout.

"If I can just keep the kids relaxed, this year should be fun. It could be the best year we've ever had."
Cohasset head field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick

Cohasset dominated nearly every facet of the game, keeping the ball in Middleboro territory for all but a few sparse minutes. On corner shots, Cohasset was awarded 14 to the Sachems' two.

"We had good communication," said senior captain Sarah Kidder, who noted the good connection between players despite a jumbled lineup. "We had Kelly Lordan, who has played five years at defense, play forward."

The whole season is shaping up to be quite a good one for the Lady Skippers, who qualified for the state tournament last year. Eliminated in the first round last year, the Lady Skippers hope to go much farther this season.

"If I can just keep the kids relaxed, this year should be fun," assessed Debbie Bostwick, head coach of the varsity squad. "It could be the best year we've ever had."

This team does have the ingredients for a successful season, including leadership, with captains Shaughnessy, Kidder, and Kelly Devine, who are not only all strong players, but are genuinely looked up to by younger members of the varsity and junior varsity squads.

"Each year I have the kids vote," explained Bostwick. "Each of these captains has something of their skills to offer the kids. Andi is the most offensive minded, Sarah is more defensive minded and aggressive. And Kelly is really about finesse and passing."

Another component this team has for success is experience. Losing only five seniors from 1999, Cohasset has 11 seniors, five juniors, and one sophomore.

"This team has a lot of potential," stated Kidder. "With the players and ability we have, we can make it to tournament and advance."

The other members of the team include junior Allison Scott at forward, senior Susan Dane and juniors Abbey Coakley, Jackie Goines and Suzanne Lynner at midfield. Defense includes frightening speed with Ulmer, Hurley, Kidder, and seniors Karen McMorris and Lydia Guild.

"I really wanted a fast defense this year," said Bostwick of her ever shifting roster.

This year, Cohasset has found itself in a small league, along with Carver, Norwell, and long time rivals Hanover and Hull.

"With these seniors, there is no reason why we can't step up and have a wonderful season," said

SPORTS NOTES

Wakeman competes for William Smith College

Sophomore defender Neeley Wakeman, of Cohasset, will compete for William Smith College field hockey team this season. The herons, 15-7-0 in 1999, opened the season on Sept. 2, at Messiah College.

Thank you from Cohasset Sailing Club

The Cohasset Sailing Club wants to thank all of those who participated in club activities this summer, and look forward to meeting the new crew of 10-year-olds in the summer of 2001. As a nonprofit community resource, the sailing club has provided a summer recreation program for the children of Cohasset since 1961. The club particularly wants to thank all who contributed to the fund-raising effort this year to pay for boat repairs and refurbishing. If your children have enjoyed the benefits of sailing club training in the past, or if you have children who will enjoy the fun of a sailing club summer in the future, consider making a tax deductible donation so that the club can continue serving the youth of Cohasset.

Cohasset Swim Center extends season

The Cohasset Swim Center will be open the weekend of September 16th and 17th, from 9AM until 5PM.

The Official Red Cross Certificates for all the children that passed their swim programs, sessions I, II and III, can be picked up on September 16th from 9AM to 5PM at the front desk.

SIDS road race coming up

The 19th annual SIDS road race will occur in Hingham on Sunday, Sept. 17.

The 10K race and 10K walk begins at Hingham High, runs through four miles of Wompatuck State Park, and returns to the high school. The two-mile "Fun Run" begins at Hingham High, goes to the entrance of the Park and back to the school.

Both the 10K walk and Fun Run begin at 9:30 a.m., while the 10K race begins at 10:30 a.m.

Pre-registration fees are $10 for the 10K walk and Fun Run and $12 for the race. Post-registration fees are $12 for the walk and Fun Run, $15 for the race.

Awards will be given to the top three overall male and female finishers in the 10K race, walk and Fun Run. The top three young boys and girls will also be awarded in the Fun Run.

Proceeds from the race will benefit the Massachusetts Center for Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS).

Jimmy Fund Walk

With funding needs for cancer research on the rise, the Jimmy Fund is hoping to attract more walkers from Cohasset and surrounding communities for the Sept. 24 event. The goal is for 8,000 walkers to raise more than $3.3 million through the one-day event.

Dana-Farber Cancer Institute is a world-renowned cancer research and treatment facility that cares for adults with all forms of cancer. The Jimmy Fund Clinic cares for children afflicted with cancer.

While individual walkers qualify to participate in the walk by raising $100, walkers are being asked to "go the extra mile" and become Pacesetters - walkers who raise $500 or more each. Pacesetters receive special recognition at the finish line. They will also receive special club T-shirts and be invited to a reception held in their honor in the spring.

Walkers may chose to walk a half marathon (13.1 miles) that begins at Wellesley High School or they can join Jimmy Fund Clinic patients and their families in the 3-mile Patient/Family Walk that starts at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

The twelfth annual Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk begins in Hopkington at 7 a.m., in Wellesley at 11 a.m., and at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute at 2 p.m. All walkers finish at Copley Square.

For more information call walk organizers at (800) 632-3562 or visit www.jimmyfund.org.

Bostwick.

Even the junior varsity has looked pretty sharp in the opening practices, especially with the addition of first year coach Ashley Timmers, a former player for Scituate High School.

Despite all these positives, the untimely death of long time athletic director Clarke Chatterton has put a somber mark on this season. His love for Cohasset and warm presence brought smiles to the faces of everyone he met.

The Skippers are determined to live up to his expectations.

"These girls want to put a banner up in the gym," said Bostwick. "And Clarke told these girls that they would be the group to do it."

field.

That play included, the speedy halfback dominated the third quarter with seven carries for 107 yards, including another touchdown run from 10 yards out. Krupczak finished the game with 24 carries for close to 150 yards. He was also far from a slouch on the other side of the ball, registering nine tackles.

When 1999's top runner for the Skippers, Daniel Trowers, moved to Randolph, there were a lot of questions about who would take on the role as primary rusher. Not anymore.

"We have different styles," said Krupczak, comparing himself to last year's 1,500 yard ball carrier. "He was more of a dancer, and I try to just hit the holes with as much speed as I can."

"[Krupczak's performance] was no surprise," asserted Rolfe. "We expected that of him."

This is not to suggest that Krupczak's success in moving the ball was a one man act. Clealry, the offensive line deserves a good portion of the whatever praise there is to go around. Senior captain Craig Davis, juniors Jari Martin, Will Prendergast and Brendan Goff, and freshman Steven Davis continually overpowered Williams' defensive line.

"They are only going to get better," said Rolfe. "Offensive line is the hardest position on the team. So much of it is experience, because you can't really simulate it in practice."

Martin and Prendergast, who both played last year, were instrumental in allowing the running game to take off. Craig Davis, who never stepped off the field while the clock was running, played outstanding defensive line, offensive line and special teams. Craig's younger brother, Steven, and Brendan Goff were among a slew of first year starters who exceeded Rolfe's high expectations."

That list included sophomore Cosimo Cambi, who recorded a forced fumble, nine tackles and half a sack to force a Williams punt.

Also on the list was sophomore Chris McKenna, who, listed at five feet six inches and 145 pounds, played a fearless game on defense and special teams against several much bigger opposing players a bit.

"He's not the biggest player, but he plays so large," said Rolfe.

Not to be outdone, sophomore fullback Tom Anderson was a tremendous lead blocker, and helped drive the ground attack.

"He had never played a football game in his life," said Rolfe, very impressed with his walk-on starter, "and he played a great game."

The Skipper's defensive attack was stifling the entire game outside of Williams' two touchdown drives. Craig Davis had seven tackles, senior Justin Langham had five, and sophomores Pat Carbone and John Hussey each had four.

Second on the team, behind Krupczak's nine tackles, was senior Ronan Buick with eight.

"Ronan is one of the best linebackers in the league," appraised Rolfe.

Even with this confidence boosting game under their belts, the Skippers still have a lot to improve upon in the eyes of Coach Rolfe. But if every game this season turns out like the one on Friday night, Cohasset fans will be quite pleased.

Game Notes

-16 Skippers recorded at least on tackle.

-Cohasset committed no turnovers the entire game, while Arch Bishop Williams had four.

-Twice, senior Chris Golden kicked off and tackled the returner.

-After recording four sacks through a quarter and a half, nose tackle Pat Carbone went down with a leg injury.

-Arch Bishop Williams had eleven penalties to Cohasset's two.

-Cohasset only attempted two PATs, both of which were blocked.

-Both of Arch Bishop Williams' touchdowns were scored on quarterback keepers by Peter Scully.

-Down 24-13 with less that two minutes left, Arch Bishop Williams attempted an onside kick that touched three people before sophomore Chris McKenna dove on it.

-For both Cohasset and Arch Bishop Williams, the punter and punt returners were the same player: Nick Bolster for Cohasset and Peter Scully for Williams.

-Running back Brian Krupczak had only three runs that did not pick up any positive yardage.

Breaking down old barriers with baseball

Scituate 12-year old makes trip to Cuba

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

To Ashton Tierney, these were really not much more than baseball games. OK, so he had to make two trips by plane and pass through two customs points to get there, but it was still the same sport he loved once he arrived at the field in Havana, Cuba.

Responding to an ad that ran in a small sports publication earlier this summer, Tierney was one of approximately 25 boys who tried out for a 12-year old All-Star team sponsored by the Strike One Sports Complex of Danvers and created for the sole purpose of competing in a goodwill tournament in Cuba. There was also a baseball team for 13-15 year olds and a girls softball team selected. Ashton made the final cut down to nine in his age group, and left with his parents for the week long event on July 30th.

The sociopolitical ramifications of these games were largely lost on Ashton, as they surely would be on the majority of 12-year olds. He knows about Elian Gonzalez and he's heard of Fidel Castro, though he didn't seem quite sure of what he did, and he just shrugged his shoulders when asked about the "Bay of Pigs."

"We got crushed," was the first thing the Scituate teen had to report of the trip. He was, of course, referring to the baseball games between his All-Star team and the host Cuban team. "They had the best pitchers I've ever seen."

This is not to say that Ashton was completely oblivious to the backdrop of these games, vastly alien after all from anything he's ever experienced or even witnessed. The level of poverty shocked him, but what seemed to strike him even more deeply was the way the Cubans handled these hardships.

"The people down there could see that we had a lot more than them, but they never asked us for anything, and they were really friendly," recounted Tierney, who played as a member of Scituate's 12-B travelling All-Star team earlier this summer. "I know some people were a little worried about going to Cuba, but everything was really great down there."

Ashton's mother, Karen Tierney — who obviously had a greater comprehension of the broad ranging implications of this trip made by scant few Americans — echoed her son's sentiments: "I went down there with a few concerns. What American wouldn't? But this turned out to be one of the most uplifting experiences of my life."

The Americans were put up in one of Havana's finest hotels that Karen claims would be on scale with a four-star hotel in this country. She added this was only the tip of the iceberg with regards to the displays of graciousness.

"The Cubans really went out of their way to make us feel welcome," she claimed. "And the show they put on for the games was incredible."

"Even though those kids couldn't really understand a word the other was saying, they didn't seem to have any problem communicating when they were on the same teams. I guess it goes to show you how things can get done when people share a common goal."
Karen Tierney

On opening day of the tourney, July 31, six teams — three American and three Cuban — marched into the Havana baseball complex together under their country's flags. It was at that point it really hit home with Richard Tierney just how big an ambassadorial role their son was playing.

"I saw that and I thought about how great it would be if we could settle all of our troubles this easily," recalled Ashton's dad. "You could see that these people really wanted to have a rapport with us. It was an eye opening experience."

When the games began, Richard Tierney said the Cuban players seemed almost afraid to interact with their American counterparts. At the time, he suspected the nationals might actually have been discouraged from making contact.

Whether or not that was the case, Tierney said tensions eased considerably over the course of the week. In fact, on the final day of games, the teams played in mixed squads, allowing the chance for Cuban and American players to sit on the same bench and interact as best they could within the limits of the language barrier.

"Even though those kids couldn't really understand a word the other was saying, they didn't seem to have any problem communicating when they were on the same teams," assessed Karen Tierney. "I guess it goes to show you how things can get done when people share a common goal."

At the conclusion of the final games, the teams observed the age-old custom in international athletic competition of exchanging uniforms. Tierney gave up a few hats, his uniform shirt and cleats. In return, he received a "Centro Habana" jersey and the experience of a lifetime.

"Our goals were to raise our level of play, get the flavor of the country and spread a little goodwill," said Joe Welch, the general manager of Strike One/Motivated Sports in Danvers, and the coach of Ashton's 12-year old team. "We knew our kids would bring away far more than baseball."

Strike One will be sponsoring another set of teams to play in Cuba in February.

Linda Bassett, a weekly columnist for CNC's North Shore Sunday, contributed to this article. She accompanied her son Tim, an infielder for the 13-15 year old US team, to Cuba.

Selectmen wary of Greenbush meeting

Official Greenbush stance mulled over, put off

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen have expressed concern and disappointment regarding the town's meeting next Tuesday with Gov. Paul Cellucci to discuss the restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line.

In July, the board jointly signed a letter with Scituate asking state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, to set up a meeting with the governor, after the MBTA said it was not going to be participating in any mitigation discussions with the towns at that time.

Hedlund, who was at the Cohasset selectmen's meeting the night the letter was signed, surprised both boards by saying he had already requested a meeting with the governor for the towns, and was just waiting for Cellucci to return from vacation to establish a meeting date.

However, Cohasset and Scituate will be joined at the table by Weymouth, Braintree and Hingham officials who were also invited to attend the meeting by Hedlund. And now Cohasset officials are nervous that the purpose of the meeting will be changed.

"I'm concerned with the agenda for the meeting," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "It sounds a lot different than what we requested.

"It sounds like it's going to be a staged anti-train event and that is not what we requested. We wanted to discuss the impacts [of restoration] and the fact that we expect to be dealt with fairly."

In June, the MBTA told the town it was pulling all of its mitigation offers off the table. It has since started mitigation discussions, but town officials are wary of another unexpected bump in the negotiations.

"I've told Senator Hedlund directly at least two times in the past week that our purpose at this meeting is to let the governor know where we are coming from," said board chairman Thomas Callahan. "We're trying to be good soldiers and negotiate, but we're being shafted during these negotiations."

> "It sounds like it's going to be a staged anti-train event and that is not what we requested. We wanted to discuss the impacts [of restoration] and the fact that we expect to be dealt with fairly."
> COHASSET SELECTMAN RONNIE MCMORRIS

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town has all along just wanted to get the governor's assurance that Cohasset will be dealt with in a "fair and even-handed manner."

Selectmen were nervous that the meeting would deteriorate from an informative meeting into an anti-train rally, with Cohasset's larger neighbors such as Braintree and Weymouth receiving the lion's share of attention. Though trains are already running through both towns, Braintree selectmen recently voted to formally oppose bringing the Greenbush line through the town.

New Weymouth mayor John Madden has not yet taken a formal position, but many town residents near Weymouth Landing have been very verbal as of late, regarding traffic concerns through the landing, along Route 53, and Quincy Avenue. Hedlund suggested making a "cut and cover" tunnel during a recent tour of the site, underneath Quincy Avenue.

Callahan suggested that Hedlund hopes, by bringing all of the towns together and having them rattle off their demands, that the project's $400 million price tag will blow-up even more to the point where Cellucci, who is pushing for restoration, cancels the project.

Discussion of the upcoming meeting and who should represent the town became nearly sidetracked when the board waded into the murky waters of establishing an official board position on Greenbush. As of now, the board has not made a formal position declaration.

Selectmen Michael Sullivan said with nearly all the other towns going into Tuesday's meeting with a formal position, it would behoove Cohasset to stop sitting on the fence and take a formal vote. "We need to show leadership on this issue, and we haven't done that yet, and that includes me," he said.

The meeting quickly started to turn toward a debate on the pros and cons of the train, with selectmen Merle Brown, Callahan, and Sullivan – a late convert he said – opposing restoration and selectmen Fred Koed and McMorris in favor. However, the board stopped short of taking an official vote and agreed to use Tuesday's meeting to push for an adequate mitigation package.

"Though maybe there's not enough they can do to make it beneficial," said Callahan.

Callahan, Sullivan and mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber will be attending the meeting on the town's behalf. The meeting with the governor is slated for 11:45 a.m. and is expected to last between 45 minutes and an hour.

Hingham will be an 'observer' at Greenbush talks

By Carol B. Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A private meeting planned for Primary Day between Gov. Paul Cellucci and Cohasset, Scituate, Braintree and Weymouth to talk about Greenbush restoration will also include a representative from Hingham.

The meeting was set up to hear concerns related to the proposed restoration of the nearly 18-mile Greenbush commuter rail line through the South Shore.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, arranged the meeting, which will take place in the Governor's State House office Sept. 19.

Initially, only Scituate and Cohasset town officials were invited, but Hedlund decided to request Weymouth and Braintree be included in the talks – and a short time later, Hingham.

Even though the town of Hingham reached an agreement with the MBTA several months ago in which the board of selectmen agreed to withdraw the town's lawsuit against the transit authority and drop its opposition to the project in exchange for a $40 million tunnel under Hingham Square, Hedlund thought Hingham should be included in the meeting as well because all five towns share some of the same issues.

"Although Hingham is the only host community to have reached an agreement with the MBTA, the impacts to Hingham are similar to other towns (affected by Greenbush)," Hedlund said. "It is only proper Hingham be represented at this important meeting."

Hingham accepted the invitation and will attend as an "observer," according to selectmen chairman Martin Crane.

The deal between Hingham and the MBTA also calls for a $1.35 million preservation trust fund for the purpose of preserving historic properties, streetscapes and landscapes located along or near the railroad right-of-way.

The Greenbush line, which has been mired in controversy for a decade, is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad project.

In July, Cohasset selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan and Scituate selectmen chairman Ralph Crossen jointly signed a letter asking Hedlund to set up a meeting with the governor and the two towns after the MBTA said it was not going to participate in any mitigation talks at that time.

Hedlund attended the Cohasset selectmen's meeting the evening the letter was signed and announced he had already requested a meeting with the governor and was waiting for the date to be set.

Some Cohasset officials were upset when Weymouth and Braintree were included because they feared the initial intent of the meeting might be sidetracked.

Still, Hedlund argued all five towns should have an opportunity to attend, because they have a number of the same issues, including environmental concerns.

Safety and traffic are other issues.

Hedlund proposed a cut and cover tunnel – the same type the MBTA has promised to construct in Hingham – under Quincy Avenue recently during a tour of the proposed Weymouth Landing station site by transportation secretary Kevin Sullivan.

Cohasset and Scituate selectmen want assurances there will be some good faith negotiations and that mitigation issues are addressed.

West Nile Virus found in Hingham crow with DEET concentrations above 10-15 percent for children and with concentrations above 30-35 percent for adults. Cream, lotion or stick formulas are best. Avoid products with high amounts of alcohol.

At this time, there is no vaccine available for (WNV), which Godzik describes as normally like a "mild case of the flu." Mild WNV infections cause fever, headache and body aches, often accompanied by a skin rash and swollen lymph glands. People with a low immune-system such as young children, elderly, those on anti-rejection drug therapy or have an immune deficiency problem can be victim to more severe infections. Symptoms can include headaches, high fever, neck stiffness, stupor, disorientation, coma, tremors, convulsions paralysis and sometimes death.

The state department of public health notified the Hingham Board of Health about the recent finding last week, which then released a press release last Thursday.

The Hingham health board has been collecting and transporting dead crows to the State Biological Laboratory in Jamaica Plain throughout the summer. In this instance, the dead crow was picked up Aug. 31 in Hobart Street.

The discovery of the virus in one crow, however, is not considered a significant threat to public health at this time.

Between eight and 12 dead crows have been reported by Hingham residents, including the one that tested positive and two more discovered since then. Those results are expected back this week.

Still, warns the board of health, barehanded contact should be avoided when handling dead animals and birds. If handling them is necessary, gloves or double plastic bags should be worn.

Standing water can breed mosquitoes. Therefore it's important to get rid of any around the home or in a neighborhood.

Mosquitoes will breed in any puddle or standing water that remains more than four days.

To avoid providing conditions that could lead to mosquito breeding, the board of health offers a number of suggestions:

dispose of or regularly empty any metal cans, plastic containers, ceramic pots, birdbaths, children's pools, trashcans and any other containers holding water that are located outside;

pay special attention to discarded tires, which are common places for mosquitoes to breed; drill holes in recycling containers left outdoors to allow them to drain; turn over plastic wading pools and wheelbarrows when not in use;

don't allow water to stagnate in birdbaths; aerate ornamental ponds or stock them with fish; keep swimming pools clean and properly chlorinated; remove standing water from pool covers; use landscaping to eliminate standing water that collects on a property.

The Hingham Board of Health has alerted Plymouth County Mosquito Control, which treated more than 3,000 catch basins in town.

"We took our precautions in early summer to help eliminate breeding of mosquitoes in those areas," Capman said.

Residents who find dead crows or have questions are urged to contact the Cohasset Board of Health at 383-4116. The state laboratory will only accept crows – ones that have died recently, do not have maggots or flies on them, have visible eyes and have not been killed by trauma or other animals.

State to enact stricter food regulations

By Rick Collins & Liz Lawrence
RICOLLINS@ CNC.COM &
LLAWRENCE@CNC.COM

Parents with children who buy lunch from school cafeterias should not be too concerned about them getting food borne-illnesses.

At least that's the view of a state official charged with overseeing how food is handled.

"School cafeterias have received pretty good training," said Richard Waskiewicz, director of state food services. "They are in pretty good shape."

In an effort to combat food-borne illnesses, the state Department of Health (MDPH) is mandating stricter regulations on how food in all public settings, including school cafeterias, is to be prepared and handled.

Beginning Oct. 1 the federal "Food Code" will require that public food services have absolutely no bare-hand contact with ready-to-eat foods, and that all food managers have extensive training and certification, said Waskiewicz.

Places such as school cafeterias which serve young people every day will be one of the many public food establishments in addition to restaurants, hospitals, groceries and all other retail food services that will have to be up to par with the new regulations.

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the town has up to five years to come into compliance with new laws. One of the new guidelines will require food service establishments to keep all cold food at 41 degrees, instead of 45 degrees, which is the current regulation. Cohasset schools also currently meet the state requirement of keeping all hot food maintained at 140 degrees.

"The whole scope of the new regulations is to reduce incidents of food-borne illnesses," said Waskiewicz.

The DPH is cracking down because the number of food-borne illnesses — such as salmonella poisoning, staph, and many other bacterial and viral agents — has escalated in the past five years, said Waskiewicz.

According to DPH, for the last few years at least 450 incidents of food borne-illness have taken place in Massachusetts, and up to 2,000 people have gotten sick, and in some cases death has even occurred.

The sicknesses, said Waskiewicz, most adversely affect the youth, elderly, and those with poor immune systems.

However, he said because the youth population falls in that category, school cafeterias have always taken major precautions.

The places people should be most worried about, said Waskiewicz, are the smaller establishments that serve fewer people than bigger more well-known restaurants. He referred to the places as "mom and pop shops," or little grocery type vendors.

However, regardless of what the size of an establishment is, Waskiewicz warned all food establishments and local health boards to be on the lookout for some major risks.

He said undercooking food or eating raw foods is one way to cause illnesses. Poor cooling practices are another.

"If you don't cool food rapidly enough, any harmful bacteria due to possible inadequate cooking can multiply to levels that will cause illness," said Waskiewicz. Cross contamination, or contaminating food by accident with other raw foods or on unclean countertops, can be another one, said Waskiewicz.

One of most common ways people can get sick is to, "wash lettuce in a sink without cleaning the sink thoroughly," said Wakiewicz. For example he said there could have been some raw chicken in that sink whose bacteria could get on the lettuce being washed.

The last major risk factor, said Waskiewicz, is "hot holding," or hot food on display becoming contaminated because the temperatures in the tray gets too cool.

"Below [the 140 degree requirement] you can risk bacteria growing again," said Waskiewicz.

Local boards of health are required to inspect facilities including school cafeterias twice a year, and now will have more work cut out for them.

The 351 health boards throughout the a state, said Waskiewicz, now will have to look more closely and ask more questions about how food establishments operate.

"It will take longer to do inspections now," said Waskiewicz.

One other change in regulations will require a trained and certified "food service manager" on duty at all times, while food is being served, said Godzik. The individual will have to take a course and pass a test before becoming certified. All establishments, such as restaurants, delis, pizza shops and cafeterias, have one year to meet the regulation.

Waskiewicz said he hopes to see the new regulations decrease the numbers of people in the state getting food-borne illnesses.

However, Waskiewicz said it all starts with good hygiene like washing hands which everyone- — consumers, servers and even students — can participate in.

BULLETIN BOARD

Appalachia group to meet

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold an informational meeting for its 14th work-camp experience. The meeting will take place this Sunday, Sept. 17, from 8 to 9 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. There will be a slide show from last year's journey by the 138 volunteers to four counties in Kentucky.

Parents and alumni are welcome to come and see the show.

Registration forms and schedules will be distributed and explained. Do note this is a year-long commitment of fund-raising and preparation. The dates for the 2001 trip are tentatively set for June 23 to July 1. Deadline for returning the forms and non-refundable $100 deposit is Oct. 1. The trip is open to anyone in 10th grade or older and any interested adults.

Visit the group's new web site, www.cohassetASP.org, hosted by Dreamcom.

Soccer booster breakfast planned

On Sunday, Oct. 1, at the Deer Hill School, the annual soccer booster breakfast will be held. From eight to 12 volunteers will be flipping your favorite pancakes, be it chocolate chip or blueberry. This year the menu will also be expanded to include grilled sausages and bagels, among other things.

The varsity soccer players will be at the breakfast (girls 8-10, boys 10-12) to share ball skills and pick up play with whoever wishes.

Tickets will be available through the soccer players and at local events around town or at the door Sunday, Oct. 1.

Tickets are $5 each or $20 maximum family donation.

If you have questions call Kathie at 383-1237.

Joan Paley to sign books

Noted Scituate children's illustrator Joan Paley (Little, Brown $13.95) will sign copies of her new book, Little White Duck, a sing along story on Saturday, Sept. 16 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. This favorite song written in the 1950s has been a kid-pleaser for generations, thanks to such song stylists as Danny Kay, Burl Ives, and more recently, Raffi. The real news however is the gorgeous new illustrations offered in an oversized format. Working with cut paper, crayon, pastel and washes of watercolor Joan Paley has created luscious collages that appear three-dimensional. Paley stages the song as a play. As a guitar-playing mouse narrates, a duck, a frog and a black bug are successively introduced as happily " doing what (they) oughter... in the water." Then along comes a little red snake that clears the room, so to speak, by scaring the duck and frog and eating the bug, leaving the song to conclude, "Boo! Hoo! Hoo! . But the book itself ends on an up beat, with the bug, along with the rest of the cast, taking a bow as the animal audience clamors, "Bravo." Luminous and full of movement, this art will demand repeated viewing. Guitarist Norman Paley will join Joan to play this song and others. Free for all ages. Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve your signed copy.

Special event at Buttonwood Books

On Saturday, Sept. 16 from 8:30 - 9:30am, Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will hold a pre-publication event heralding the arrival of Philip Pullman's latest novel, "The Amber Spyglass." Young readers have been looking forward to this thrilling conclusion to His Dark Materials trilogy. Buttonwood is one of 100 stores selected to host this event and is celebrating with a special early morning opening, light breakfast and a free raffle for ten, pre-publication, limited edition copies of "The Amber Spyglass." The tenth copy will be reserved for a special drawing for participants who bring their own daemon. There will also be a raffle for ten CD's containing excerpts from all three novels.

Brega brothers bring art show to Springfield Museum of Fine Arts

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

They are identical twins with an identical artistic mission.

For the Brega brothers, you might say blood is thicker than oil and water.

David Brega, of Marshfield, and his brother Doug, of Springfield, both 51, are about to make one of their lifetime dreams come true. The Brega's will host their own art show at Springfield's Museum of Fine Arts. The show, titled "Oil and Water" is a 25-year retrospective of all of their art work. It opens Sept. 20 and will run through Dec. 31 before moving on to the Albrecht-Kemper Museum of Art in Missouri from March through June, 2001.

The show, the first major exhibit the brothers have done together was a long time in the planning.

"This is a major event," David said. "It was organized by the (Springfield) museum, my brother, and myself for the past three years. It will allow hundreds of thousands of people to view our work, and it will certainly give us some added notoriety in the field of fine art."

"To me, a retrospective show is the feather in the cap of an artist. It's a great accolade. Usually, the subjects of retrospective shows are dead, or just much older than we are. This kind of thing not only helps spread our names, but it also elevates the value of our paintings."

Although they are identical twins, there is one artistic difference when it comes to their work. David's medium is oil — Doug's focus is watercolor work.. But they both excel in their respective mediums. And both have exhibited their work in their fair share of art shows around the country, including in the capitol of the art world, New York City.

"We are carrying on an artistic tradition," David said. "Doug and I are not modernist painters or painters of abstract art—we are realists. Within that tradition, we are using some of the old rules, breaking some of them, and creating some of our own. We're not Van Goghs in the sense that we're making personal statements with our work. My work is just kind of entertaining while Doug's is really visually stimulating. One of the main styles I use is called Trompe L'oeils, which in French means 'trick on the eye.' Doug deals with more landscapes and characters."

"That's what we have in common," Doug

No Wey Café recaps its comedy lineup

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"People are more motivated and more in the mood for going out for live comedy now at this time of year, toward the end of the summer. They're back from the Cape or other vacation spots, and the weather is still good. So we thought that the series might get off to an even better start and work better all around this time."

No Wey Cafe co-owner and Weymouth resident Art Tagliaferri.

The Boston Comedy Club and Weymouth's No Wey Cafe put its merger to the test for the first time last winter. The results were good enough that they're back for another go-round this fall.

The fall season of live BCC shows kicks off at the Club's host venue — the No Wey Cafe, Route 3A, North Weymouth, on Saturday (Sept. 16) at 9 p.m.

Appearing for the season opener is headliner Marci "Coyote" Rose, a familiar name on the current Boston and New York comedy club circuits, plus local funnymen Bob Niles, of Weymouth, and comedian/musician Paul Wayne, who also runs the Boston Comedy Company, promoting and booking area comedians and sponsoring the official Comedy Clubs, from his home in Hanson.

"Last winter was a real litmus test for starting up the Boston Comedy Club here," said No Wey Cafe co-owner and Weymouth resident Art Tagliaferri.

"We had our opening show on a deathly cold night in the dead of winter. And we got more than the 60-80 customer turnout we were expecting or hoping for that night. Then there were still people coming out in healthy numbers for our follow up shows over the first couple of weekends."

Tagliaferri said that all those involved both at the BCC and the Café were generally pleased by last winter's initial spate of live standup comedy shows, a successful ice-breaking attempt to resurrect the Boston Comedy Club in the Boston area after an absence of nearly two decades. Even though last winter's comedy schedule eventually

Quincy ArtsFest is this weekend

The third annual Quincy ArtsFest will be held Saturday, Sept. 16, and Sunday, Sept. 17, on the lawn at the Richard J. Koch Family Park & Recreation Complex at One Merrymount Parkway in Quincy. The show will be open to the public from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free to the public all weekend.

The Quincy ArtsFest features a juried art show, a juried photography show, a Quincy Art Association members' show and young artists' show. More than 300 works of art and photography have been entered in this year's show from artists and photographers throughout Greater Boston and the South Shore.

"In just three years, the Quincy ArtsFest has become a signature event for the Quincy Art Association. It is great to see this community appreciate its many talented artists and photographers," said Anet Paglierani from the Quincy Art Association.

In addition to the art show, there will be live entertainment all weekend long. Acts such as Made in the Shade Dixieland Band, Riverside Theater Works, the Forbes School of Irish Step-Dance, the Christine Bonoli Band, Joe Lundbohm and Brenda the Magician will be featured on the main stage throughout the weekend.

"The Quincy Park Department is happy to co-sponsor one of the finest, family-oriented events on the South Shore. At the Quincy ArtsFest, you will find interesting displays, activities and entertainment for your whole family. I strongly encourage you to join us for a great weekend in the park and enjoy some of the finest artistic talents on the South Shore," said Thomas P. Koch, executive director of the park, forestry and cemetery departments.

Demonstrations and activities for children will occur all weekend, including rock-painting, cookie decorating, mini-sailboat decorating and much more.

The Quincy ArtsFest is sponsored by the Quincy Art Association, Best Western — Adams Inn and the Quincy Park and Recreation Departments.

"The Quincy ArtsFest continues to build upon its success from year to year. The talents of the artists of all ages are to be admired and appreciated in our unique park setting. I expect that this year will be our best ever," said Barry Welch, director of the Quincy Recreation Department.

For more information on the Quincy ArtsFest, call the Quincy Park Department at (617) 376-1254.

BULLETIN BOARD

Appalachia group to meet

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will hold an informational meeting for its 14th work-camp experience. The meeting will take place this Sunday, Sept. 17, from 8 to 9 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church. There will be a slide show from last year's journey by the 138 volunteers to four counties in Kentucky.

Parents and alumni are welcome to come and see the show.

Registration forms and schedules will be distributed and explained. Do note this is a year-long commitment of fund-raising and preparation. The dates for the 2001 trip are tentatively set for June 23 to July 1. Deadline for returning the forms and non-refundable $100 deposit is Oct. 1. The trip is open to anyone in 10th grade or older and any interested adults.

Visit the group's new web site, www.cohassetASP.org, hosted by Dreamcom.

Soccer booster breakfast planned

On Sunday, Oct. 1, at the Deer Hill School, the annual soccer booster breakfast will be held. From eight to 12 volunteers will be flipping your favorite pancakes, be it chocolate chip or blueberry. This year the menu will also be expanded to include grilled sausages and bagels, among other things.

The varsity soccer players will be at the breakfast (girls 8-10, boys 10-12) to share ball skills and pick up play with whoever wishes.

Tickets will be available through the soccer players and at local events around town or at the door Sunday, Oct. 1.

Tickets are $5 each or $20 maximum family donation.

If you have questions call Kathie at 383-1237.

Joan Paley to sign books

Noted Scituate children's illustrator Joan Paley (Little, Brown $13.95) will sign copies of her new book, Little White Duck, a sing along story on Saturday, Sept. 16 from 2-4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Rte. 3A, Cohasset. This favorite song written in the 1950s has been a kid-pleaser for generations, thanks to such song stylists as Danny Kay, Burl Ives, and more recently, Raffi. The real news however is the gorgeous new illustrations offered in an oversized format. Working with cut paper, crayon, pastel and washes of watercolor Joan Paley has created luscious collages that appear three-dimensional. Paley stages the song as a play. As a guitar-playing mouse narrates, a duck, a frog and a black bug are successively introduced as happily " doing what (they) oughter... in the water." Then along comes a little red snake that clears the room, so to speak, by scaring the duck and frog and eating the bug, leaving the song to conclude, "Boo! Hoo! Hoo! . But the book itself ends on an up beat, with the bug, along with the rest of the cast, taking a bow as the animal audience clamors, "Bravo." Luminous and full of movement, this art will demand repeated viewing. Guitarist Norman Paley will join Joan to play this song and others. Free for all ages. Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve your signed copy.

Special event at Buttonwood Books

On Saturday, Sept. 16 from 8:30 - 9:30am, Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will hold a pre-publication event heralding the arrival of Philip Pullman's latest novel, "The Amber Spyglass." Young readers have been looking forward to this thrilling conclusion to His Dark Materials trilogy. Buttonwood is one of 100 stores selected to host this event and is celebrating with a special early morning opening, light breakfast and a free raffle for ten, pre-publication, limited edition copies of "The Amber Spyglass." The tenth copy will be reserved for a special drawing for participants who bring their own daemon. There will also be a raffle for ten CD's containing excerpts from all three novels.

Farmers Market

The Farmers Market is open from 2:30-6 p.m. Thursdays through Oct.1. Call Julia Peterson at 545-6036 for more information.

Pasta with Arugula, Goat Cheese, and Raw Tomatoes

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Quick pasta dishes are the modern equivalent of the Victorian standby pease porridge ("some like it in the pot nine days old") because it is what most folks eat for dinner when are out of time and ideas. The problem with these last-minute, made-up recipes is that they are usually not very good. Since the ingredient list is short, small mistakes in quantities or preparation methods often result in watery, garlicky, dull, or unbalanced dishes. The question I set out to answer was how to take a few ingredients and toss them with hot pasta to make a quick but inspiring dinner.

First, I began with a short shopping list: an assertive green, cheese, and tomatoes. I tested arugula, Swiss chard, spinach, and escarole. Cooked, the latter three greens had more flavor than arugula. However, raw arugula was my favorite since it required no cooking and has a wonderful peppery flavor which complements cheese. (I found it best to cut the arugula into 1-inch strips.) For the cheese, I found that fresh, not aged, goat cheese melts nicely into a creamy sauce over the cooked pasta. Although ricotta and mascarpone were also creamy, they were quite bland and mozzarella turned into a stringy mess when paired with hot pasta. About one cup of crumbled fresh chevre (goat cheese) was the right amount. I then set out to test the addition of tomatoes. I began by cooking fresh tomatoes until they were quite soft (about 10 minutes), just barely soft (about 2 minutes) and then using them raw. The cooked versions were less flavorful than the uncooked tomatoes which also makes this recipe that much easier to prepare. I did find it best to seed the raw tomatoes although they do not have to be peeled.

Other ingredients tested were onions, garlic, capers, and basil. Onions were precooked but did not work well raw. The same was true of garlic. I like the addition of capers but they were strictly optional. It turned out that fresh basil was a nice addition, balancing the arugula and tomatoes. A half-cup of leaves cut into 1/4-inch strips was just right. All that was left to round things out was 2 tablespoons of fruity extra virgin olive oil, about 1/2 teaspoon salt and lots of freshly ground pepper. As for the pasta, I liked penne or fusili since the chunky texture trapped the cheesy sauce and the small size allowed for pieces of tomato and greens in each bite.

PASTA WITH ARUGULA, GOAT CHEESE, AND RAW TOMATOES

Other than boiling pasta, this recipe requires no cooking and little preparation.

1 pound pasta
2 cups good-quality fresh tomatoes, seeded and cut into 1/2 inch pieces
2 cups well-rinsed arugula cut into 1-inch strips
1/2 cup basil cut into 1/4-inch strips
5 ounces fresh, not aged, goat cheese, crumbled
2 teaspoons capers, optional
1/2 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil

Set a large pot of salted water over high heat to boil. (Use one gallon of water and 1 tablespoon of salt for one pound of pasta.) When the water is at a rolling boil add the pasta and cook according to package checking for doneness 3 minutes before the instructed time. Reserve 1/2 cup of cooking water. Once the pasta is cooked and well-drained place it in a large serving or mixing bowl. Add the remaining ingredients and mix (I found large tongs to be easiest for this step) until the cheese is melted and the other ingredients are well distributed. Add reserved hot cooking water as necessary to make a creamy sauce. Serve immediately.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13

Astrological storm clouds begin to move out today. The full moon culminates at 3:37 p.m., 21-degrees of Pisces. The moon becomes inactive at this time, traveling at the tail end of the zodiac. However, applying alignments of Mercury/Pluto and Venus/Uranus also affect the day. Mercury/Pluto can help you to find new solutions to old problems. This is a favorable influence for troubleshooting and getting to the heart of a matter. Venus/Uranus prompts you to forget your troubles and go for the good times tonight.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14

The moon enters Aries at 8:00 a.m., setting a fast pace in the next few days. The green light is on for new starts across the board. Influences are most favorable before 3:04 p.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious alignment to expansive Jupiter. This is an ideal time to start new projects, sign contracts, make important decisions. However, the remainder of the day continues to rate high for getting things done.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

If you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, you can be most productive today. The moon continues to travel in fiery Aries. Others may be impulsive, aggressive, impatient. Keep a cool head and stay focused. It is okay to initiate new activities. A lunar polarity to Venus may spark romantic fireworks this evening. Take a walk on the wild side.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way this morning. An Aries moon continues to generate high energy and enthusiasm. All sports and physical activities are also highlighted. At 2:50 p.m. the Aries moon aligns with its planetary ruler, Mars, and becomes inactive. The planet Mars moves into Virgo at 8:20 p.m., remaining there until November 3. Influences turn around completely at 3:05 p.m., when a Taurus moon arrives. This moon forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune, setting the stage for a laid-back evening. Get extra rest.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17

The combination of a Taurus moon and applying 90-degree alignment of Mars/Saturn makes this a day to get things done. Stop procrastinating and follow through on projects you've been putting off. Focus on issues that just won't go away and make tough choices. Ignore the criticism and do what your conscience tells you. A lunar alignment to Uranus may disrupt the flow of the evening. Be adaptable. A sense of humor is your ace in the hole.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18

Take it slow and easy this morning. Sidestep anger, irritability. Keep it light and focus on the positives. A 90-degree alignment of Mars and Saturn takes the spotlight. It may generate delays, setbacks, obstacles. Allow extra time. This is a day to follow through on promises, commitments you have made. Finish old business rather than starting new activities. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 1:31 p.m. A Gemini moon takes over at 8:22 p.m. and interacts with Saturn at 10:01 p.m. and Mars at 10:41 p.m.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19

Astrological blue skies and sunshine return. The moon travels in lively Gemini today and tomorrow. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Uranus also impacts this period. People will be outgoing, sociable and talkative. Keep an open mind on all issues. This is a great day for learning, gaining new awareness and understanding. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

It may be difficult to focus on practical matters today. Pay extra attention to details so that you don't overlook something significant. The moon travels in Gemini, active until 9:28 p.m. All social activities are highlighted. You can make gains developing projects that need help or support from others. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 9:28 p.m. This moon decreases in light until September 27, when the new moon occurs.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

This is the last full day of summer. The Autumnal Equinox arrives tomorrow. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, plan to finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 12:16 a.m. Focus on family and domestic responsibilities. Give children, elderly, pets extra time and attention; follow through on promises you have made. Plan a quiet evening.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

The moon continues to travel in family-oriented Cancer. The big event today is the Autumnal Equinox. At 1:28 p.m. the sun enters Libra, remaining there until October 22. It is okay to initiate new activities between 1:28-11:58 p.m., when the Cancer moon becomes inactive. Share a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

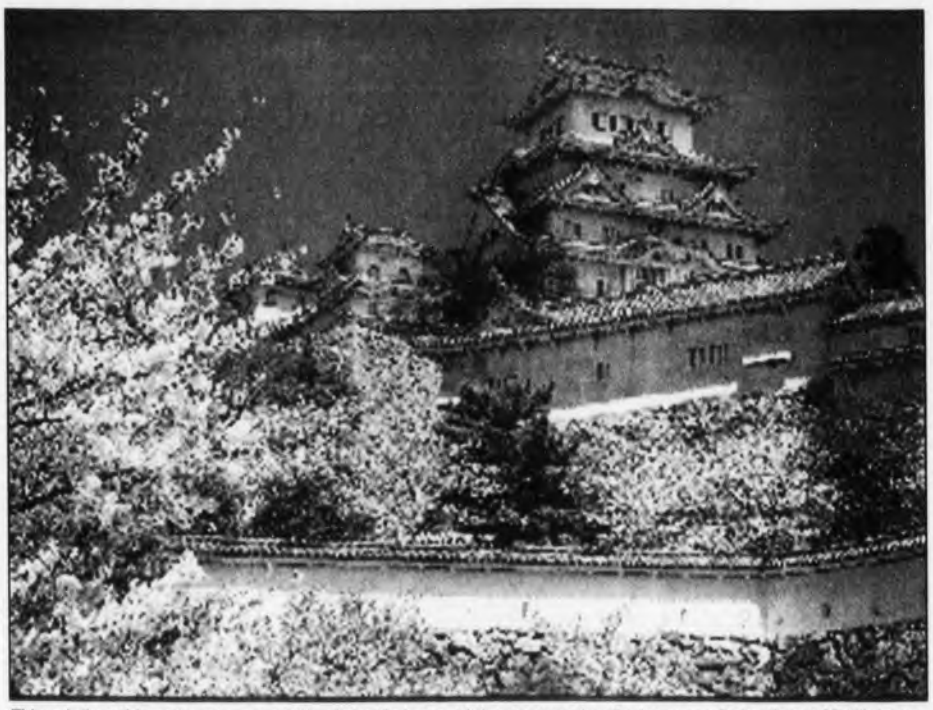
Art on the 'Net

Cyber museum makes art accessible to all

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM



This painting of Japan's extravagant Himeji Castle is one of the many works of art one can find online at Mathis' new website.

It started as a simple undertaking for his best friend, but when Marc Mathis was done, he had created a new kind of artistic showplace—an "Internet museum" he calls Cfinearts.com.

Mathis, who because of his disability is confined to a wheelchair, wanted to do something for his best friend Kenny Lockheart, who is also disabled due to a brittle bone disease.

Mathis said Lockheart was once a very active artist, but because of his bone disorder, he can no longer paint.

"At first, I wanted to create a website that would showcase Kenny's art," Mathis said. "But eventually, I came up with an idea. I could show Kenny's art, but at the same time, I could create a showplace where disabled artists could go without having to compete with an art gallery crowd."

And so he did.

Mathis posted Lockheart's art on the website, but at the same time, he started collecting other various works of art to display. Among those works were world-renown paintings, extravagant album covers, photographs, sketches, and his own stash of "collectibles."

Mathis put up a sum of $30,000 to get the website up and running, and it was fully functional at the beginning of June.

"It took me a while to get the site in the right format," Mathis said, "to get it the way I wanted it."

Now, Mathis said he is in the process of getting the word out to artists around the state. He said he has decided to make the website function as a forum not only for disabled artists, but for other artists who are struggling to get their work noticed.

"At first, I wanted to create a web site that would showcase Kenny's art. But eventually, I came up with an idea. I could show Kenny's art, but at the same time, I could create a showplace where disabled artists could go without having to compete with an art gallery crowd."

Marc Mathis, founder of Cfinearts.com

"I'm just trying to advertise this as much as possible," Mathis said. "As far as I know, nobody else has done anything like this. There's other art-oriented websites out there, but none set up like this. It's just a real visual experience."

Mathis said artists who would like to send him material can e-mail him prints or photos their work, but should call him first.

There are approximately 75 different "rooms" in Mathis' online gallery at this point. The rooms feature a wide spectrum of art forms for people to look at. Artists can send their artwork to him to simply be shown, or to sell. Mathis said he will be posting a number of works in his own art collection on the website as well.

"I'm still expanding it. And some of the rooms won't always be there. I want it to function like a regular art gallery in the sense that I will put up certain pieces and take down certain pieces. I'm going to open up rooms and close down rooms."

Marc Mathis, founder of Cfinearts.com

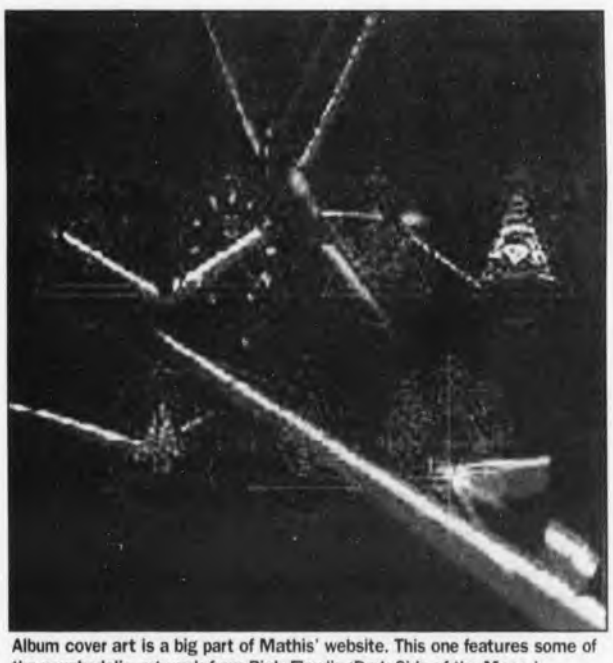
Mathis said some of the rooms which are up on the website right now include one totally dedicated to album covers, a wild species room, a photo room, a sculpture room and even a virtual reality room.

"I'm still expanding it," he said. "And some of the rooms won't always be there. I want it to function like a regular art gallery in the sense that I will put up certain pieces and take down certain pieces. I'm going to open up rooms and close down rooms."

Mathis said area artists can feel free to call him so that they can send him their work—but he said he has the last word regarding what gets posted and what does not.

"I'm the curator of this museum," he joked. "But seriously, I'm really excited about this. Everything anyone needs to see will be here."

For more information on posting material on Mathis' site, call (617) 266-9399 or just log onto the website at www.cfinearts.com. Mathis said currently, all work is being posted for free for a limited time.



Album cover art is a big part of Mathis' website. This one features some of the psychedelic art work from Pink Floyd's 'Dark Side of the Moon.'

Blended mortgages give 'jumbo' loan borrowers options for savings

By Carol Bulman, President
CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

The term "jumbo" in the mortgage business refers to a loan that exceeds the amount that the two secondary market giants, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, will lend to a person purchasing a home.

Carol Bulman

The jumbo loan is more technically referred to as a "non-conforming" loan, while a "conforming" loan is one that falls under the Fannie/Freddie limit, currently $240,000 on a single-family home.

The jumbo loan is more technically referred to as a "non-conforming" loan, while a "conforming" loan is one that falls under the Fannie/Freddie limit, currently $240,000 on a single-family home. Any time a loan does not "conform" to Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac's guidelines, the result can be a higher interest rate. Obviously, when talking about mortgage amounts in excess of $240,000, any variance of interest or points on the loan will make a significant difference to the person making the payments during the next decade or so.

Does this mean there is little hope or little choice for the "jumbo" customer? No, not at all. Most lenders and mortgage brokers will offer an array of mortgage products to their jumbo-loan borrowers.

Does this mean there is little hope or little choice for the "jumbo" customer? No, not at all. Most lenders and mortgage brokers will offer an array of mortgage products to their jumbo-loan borrowers.

Faced with this challenge of servicing the wants and needs of the jumbo customer, the mortgage industry responded with a hybrid loan, providing a first mortgage up to $240,000 at "conforming" interest rates, and a second for the balance of the funds needed. This alternative is commonly known as the "blended mortgage."

For example, let's assume the jumbo (or non-conforming) interest rate is 7 percent and the conforming rate is 6.75 percent, and the customer wants to borrow $250,000. The borrower could have the option of "blending" a first mortgage of 6.75 percent, plus a second mortgage with the same or slightly higher interest rate. Once the two payments are added together, the jumbo-loan customer is sure to save considerable finance charges — both monthly and certainly over the life of the loan.

The second mortgage part of the blended loan can be an adjustable or a fixed rate. The customer often plans to pay the second off more aggressively, leaving the first mortgage with the lower interest rate intact.

Most loans will not allow a "recast" of payments with a significant amount paid down, only a reduction in the interest paid, and ultimately a reduction in the term (number of years) of the loan. Paying off the second mortgage early on a blended mortgage will reduce the total principal and interest due monthly, providing the same result as recasting the payments.

The blended mortgage also may be used to avoid mortgage insurance on both conforming and non-conforming loans. A borrower is generally required to pay mortgage insurance when putting less than 20 percent down on a property. The blended mortgage gives the borrower the opportunity to avoid mortgage insurance by combining a first mortgage of up to 80 percent of the value, and a second mortgage for the balance of what is needed.

In other words, a customer needing to put 10 percent down on a $100,000 loan may opt to get a blend of $80,000 first mortgage and $10,000 second, rather than getting one loan for $90,000; thus avoiding mortgage insurance. Mortgage insurance is not tax-deductible, but interest on a mortgage is. Therefore, the benefits can be quite dramatic when the savings are analyzed.

Sensational sedums provide carefree beauty

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

With the passing of Labor Day, a gardener's weekly checklist expands substantially as the fall planting season surges ahead at a furious pace. The months of September and October provide ideal conditions for a wide variety of gardening activities. Warm soil temperatures, reliable moisture and cooler weather offer a perfect combination for planting trees, shrubs and perennials and for renovating lawns, gardens and landscapes.

Healthy, fresh nursery stock is arriving daily at our local garden centers, often accompanied by sales on even these prime new trees and shrubs. A glorious selection of spring-flowering bulbs awaits. Fall plantings of snowdrops, crocuses, daffodils, tulips, and hyacinths will reap magical springtime rewards. Spectacular chrysanthemums in warm harvest hues, brilliant yellows and whites, burgundy, and shades of purple and pink, create a kaleidoscope of festive color. Pots of asters, smothered with multitudes of daisies in vibrant tones of rich royal purple, glowing pink, vivid raspberry and glistening white, intermingle with the long-lasting foliage of decorative kale to produce a dazzling display. Bittersweet, gourds, pumpkins and cornstalks have all appeared to decorate and revitalize our tired landscapes and announce the arrival of autumn.

Among the all-time perennial favorites, few can rival the ease and beauty of the carefree sedums. Commonly known as stonecrop or live-forever, this broad genus of succulent plants includes trailing, stoloniferous varieties suitable for the front of the border or as groundcovers, and upright, clump-forming types ideal for the middle of the border. Flower color may be white, yellow, pink or red and may be borne during different seasons depending on the variety. The majority of sedum family members are not too fussy about their growing conditions although most favor full sun in a well-drained, neutral soil. They adapt readily to dry, sandy soils but may struggle in heavy, wet soils.

Upright clumps should be divided every three to four years, preferably in the spring, to promote flowering and rejuvenate dense, overgrown crowns which may lead to overly tall, floppy stems. A sharp knife or spade can be used to split the clumps and a digging fork inserted to ease pieces away for transplanting or the entire clump may be lifted and separated; cuttings or stems which break off accidentally root readily in sand.

Perhaps the most widely-grown perennial in our area, Sedum 'Autumn Joy' provides an especially long season of interest. Its fleshy, gray-green leaves appear on unbranched stalks topped by broad flower heads resembling broccoli in July and August which gradually produce pink, star-shaped flowers in late August and early September. As the fall progresses, the flattened domes acquire a deeper tone of reddish-bronze before turning a warm copper which persists throughout the winter as snow collects on the stiff seed heads.

Several cultivars of Sedum spectabile resemble S. 'Autumn Joy' in appearance and growth habit, providing fabulous fall color and scalloped gray-green leaves, although their flowers lack some of the lasting qualities of their cousin. Sedum 'Brilliant' bears electric, purplish-pink clusters and S. 'Stardust' is similar with flowers of snowy white. 'Frosty Morn' displays stunning variegated foliage with a thick white rim around each leaf adorned by pink and white flower clusters which create a striking appearance even from a distance.

Additional upright varieties include a number of handsome cultivars which feature purple or bronze tinted foliage and stems. Sedum 'Matrona' has become a personal favorite with dramatic, rigid, reddish-purple stems and leaves slightly tinged rosy-purple topped by massive flower heads bearing a multitude of star-shaped, dusty pink blooms. Sedums 'Arthur Branch,' 'Atropurpureum' and 'Morchen' stand out in the garden with mahogany-colored leaves which are particularly elegant in combination with silver, variegated or gold tinted foliages.

For the front of the border, look for S. 'Vera Jameson,' S. 'Bertram Anderson,' or S. sieboldii. 'Vera Jameson' forms a wide mound, 8 inches tall, of handsome, rosy-purple leaves and stems which produce small clusters of rose-pink flowers; 'Bertram Anderson' is similar in appearance but with smaller leaves. Foliage color intensifies as the temperatures cool down. Sedum sieboldii exhibits distinctive blue-gray leaves rimmed with a thin, rosy band, complemented by pretty pink flowers in autumn.

Add several varieties of these unique, carefree perennials to your garden for an attractive foliar display all season. Their showy, early autumn flowers will sparkle in the late season landscape providing a welcome touch of color and an irresistible lure to multitudes of bees and butterflies.
